

Issue 11: Sunday, 2 August Afternoon

I must take issue with calling poffertjes "Dutch pancakes". Dutch pancakes are HUGE. Poffertjes are tiny.

I apologize if I walked through any people or tables in Squid Hall yesterday morning. I swear I was not drunk, just on a very laboring computer.

I walked through some tables in Squid Hall too! Easy to do.

Someone said "tautoko" to me in a chat room, and I feel like I've really been in New Zealand.

A little poem for the first virtual Worldcon:
Five days of insanity
Oh the humanity
I click on a room
It refuses to Zoom
I say words of depravity!

There once was a con in New Zealand
That had a lot to deal with.
In the middle of tension
A brand-new invention
That amazed everyone
who's seen it.

Help! I've been captured by the Virtualizers! They're goin 01100111001000000111
010001101111001000000110
00100110100101110100011101
00011010010110011001111001
001000000110110101100101
00100001

010011110110100000100000
01100010011101010110011101
10011101100101011100100010
0001001000000100100100
1001110110110100100000011
01110011001010111011001100
101011100100010000001100
1110110111101101001011011100
1100111001000000111010001
10111100100000011001110110
010101110100001000000110
100001101111011011011001
01001000000110111001101111
0111011100100000001110100
0101000

From this morning's Daily Briefing, a discussion on the art and perils of glass blowing:
Glass blowing combines the best elements of artwork and a car race.
"You can burn yourself on hot glass and cut yourself on cold glass"
"Is there a technical term for that?" "Yes - OUCH."

Daily Briefing - "Can I tell a Dutch Cheese story?"
"If it is full of holes, then it's a Swiss Cheese story..."

A huge thanks to Morgan Hazelwood who has been working tirelessly for weeks to train the programme participants before the con started, training the Behind The Scenes tech staff to host zooms, and answering questions in what feels like just about every room across three separate Discord Servers throughout the duration of the Convention itself.

The votes are in! The Best Dressed Dealer Table belongs to Bard & Jester!

With thanks to:
JadeValour, Irina,
BethMitcham, Jenny Hammond,
RalaOfTheVale,
Metsäpeto, Jo Toon (She/Her), Anne, ravyn

Images from: ravyn