"The film of Richard Adams's Watership Down is a delight. Unqualifiedly, one of the most enjoyable evenings I've ever spent during a lifetime passionately devoted to sitting in dark places watching phantoms on movie screens. It is intelligent, elegant, true to the splendid book from which it was adapted, and as uplifting for adults as it will be for kids. In a way, it makes noble children of us all. I cannot recommend it too highly; and wear something with long sleeves when you see it: even an unregenerate cynic like me was misty-eyed when it ended."
