A Worldcon for All of Us

Ireland has a rich tradition of storytelling. It is a land famous for its ancient myths and legends, great playwrights, award-winning novelists, innovative comics artists, and groundbreaking illustrators. Our well-established science fiction and fantasy community and all of the Dublin 2019 team would consider it an honour to celebrate Ireland's rich cultural heritage, contemporary creators and fandoms everywhere.

We love our venue, the Convention Centre Dublin, and we believe that its spell-binding allure will take your breath away as you watch the sun set over the city before the Kraken rises from the River Liffey!

TERVETULOA HELSINKIIN!

Welcome all to Helsinki, the host city of the 75th World Science Fiction Convention, Daughter of the Baltic Sea, the capital of Finland, my hometown. I hope you have time to savour the city as well as our event, try the current foodie revolution, see the sights and sample the sounds of it.

Helsinki is a beautiful, green city, filled with sights to see and things to try. Check out the seaside and archipelago, sample the choice locations in our Restaurant Guide, and feel free to roam around the Metropolitan area with your Free HSL Travel Card. But most of all, feel the love and energy that the hundreds of volunteers have put together, in order to make this Worldcon the best ever, or at least the most Northern and Coolest one. We have wonderful Guests, a LOT of programming, and a plethora of other things to show you all, so this should be a fun mission.

It was a mere five years ago when I received that phone call that changed my life fairly significantly, probably also for the entire Finnish fandom. Eemeli Aro (the Catalyst, as is his alter ego) was on the other end of the call, inquiring whether it would be a good idea for Helsinki to bid for Worldcon. I thought that the idea sounded not only crazy, but also dangerous – and still said “yes” to it. Have I regretted that answer? Jätän vastaamatta kysymykseen, koska vastaukseni saatettaisiin tulkita väärin.

I want to thank each and every person involved, whether you have been along for the ride from the beginning, or just a part of the way. Every little bit has helped, made all this possible, and by being a small part of the big machine, vitally instrumental in the greater scheme of things. The immeasurable amount of free work fandom does in order to make these dreams of a Worldcon into reality is simply breathtaking. I cannot possibly express the depths of my gratitude to all of you, but rest assured, I value you all. This has been a journey that I will never forget.

Fandom is love.

And now, here we are. After five years of bidding, partying, losing a vote, partying some more, and working hard to spread the word on Helsinki, Finland, Finnish fandom, SF/F and Weird, winning the Site Selection, planning, organizing, shedding blood, sweat and tears, and building a community of Worldcon 75 organisation, we can finally show you the results of our work. It has been hard work, and not always successful, but I believe the end result is something wonderful, inspiring and well worth the toil. I sure am going to relish the opportunity of a lifetime to see as much as possible at my local Worldcon.

I hope you'll enjoy Worldcon 75!

GREETING BY MAYOR JAN VAPAAVUORI

Dear Worldcon Members,

For five very exciting days in August 2017, Helsinki will be not only the capital of Finland, but also of science fiction and fantasy. It is, indeed, a great honour for our city to host Worldcon 75; the first time that a World Science Fiction Convention takes place in a Nordic country. As previous conventions, Worldcon 75 will offer an abundant set of options, including interesting panels, parties, exhibitions and events.

Helsinki is the ideal place to organize a major event such as Worldcon: a smart, safe and compact city, where modern urban life meets a beautiful diverse environment. The strengths of Helsinki are the talented people, a functional society, and a rich cultural life. The geographical location of Helsinki as the shortest route between Asia and Europe is central to our accessibility and position as a leading transfer hub, while warp drive still remains to be discovered.

We want Helsinki to be an open city that works together with others. No city, citizen, company or organization, no matter how capable or how big, can effectively innovate on its own. Helsinki's creative, communal and distinctive atmosphere produces new phenomena and innovations worldwide. Our aim is to create the most progressive everyday life in the world and focus on finding solutions to global and sometimes even intergalactic challenges.

Warmly welcome to Helsinki. May the force be with you.

Jan Vapaavuori
Mayor of Helsinki

JOHN-HENRI HOLMBERG

FROM SHY FAN TO ESTEEMED EXPERT

One of the Worldcon Guests of Honour is a name best known in his native land, Sweden. He is John-Henri Holmberg, born in Stockholm in 1949 and active as a writer, translator, editor, and publisher. Holmberg has published several fanzines, his first at the tender age of 13. In later years, he has written non-fiction books on science fiction and fantasy and has played a part in bringing more than a thousand books into the Swedish market. Literary circles in Sweden are surprisingly anti-SF, but Holmberg has labored his whole life to spread science fiction awareness. In today's Sweden, he is the expert people turn to when they want answers to questions about science fiction literature.

IT ALL STARTED WITH SPACE PIRATES

The first science fiction novel that Holmberg can remember reading was about space pirates.

The book I have always thought of as my first science fiction novel is Georg Eliasson's Rymdpirater [Space Pirates], which I read at the age of six, in 1956.

The book was borrowed, and Holmberg had to search for a long time before he found it again.

Finding the book was a real anticlimax. The novel was not even science fiction. Everything I remembered from the story—building a spaceship, flying off Earth, and meeting space pirates—was only a daydream by the protagonist during a boring class at school. At this point, I was already so enthralled by science fiction that this disappointment did not make me give up on it.

THE CALL OF FANDOM

After the books came the realization that there were other people in the world who liked the same kind of literature. And those people had societies, magazines, and meetings.

I found fandom through the Häpna! magazine, which I started reading in 1958. Already the first magazines had a column dedicated to news from SF societies, fanzines, and cons. It was like a dream come true for a small, lonely and sickly boy who spent all his free time with science fiction.

In the spring of 1962, I started to make my own fanzine, at first with an edition of only one copy. When I turned 13, I took five or six carbon copies of my fanzines and sent them to people whose addresses I found in the societies column of Häpna! magazine.

A few days after I had sent the first issue, I received very friendly and encouraging letters from Sam J. Lundwall and Dénis Lindbohm, who were megacelebrities in Swedish fandom in those days.

At the time, being interested in science fiction meant being branded as a geek and a laughingstock. Even though it was the early 1960s and both the Soviet Union and the United States had sent up satellites, most people thought that reading stories about space travel and the future was childish. A normal teenager should play football and enjoy the Westerns shown on Swedish television.

In contrast to the many people who devour books as children and become writers as adults, young Holmberg decided that he would not become a writer. In spite of this, he wanted to make a living working with literature.

Already in my teens I was fully convinced that I would dedicate my life to literature. I was also convinced at an early age that I lacked the kind of imagination required for creating new stories. I would therefore work as a critic, commentator, translator, or publisher.

During my career, I have taken care of publishing about 1200 books. At most 150 of them have been science fiction.

The general attitude towards science fiction was rather chilly in past years.

When I studied at the university, doing one's doctoral dissertation on science fiction, horror, detective stories, or fantasy was a completely impossible idea. These genres were not considered real literature. The research question would have had to be formulated as "how can people possibly read this kind of trash?"

WHERE ARE WE GOING?

How does Holmberg see the development of the genre?

I think science fiction today has problems. None of these problems alone covers all science fiction, but altogether they cover most of the literature.

The first problem is that science fiction readers are already sufficiently numerous and wealthy to form a profitable target group. This has given rise to a tendency to serve only dedicated readers. The books published for them are difficult to approach for someone not versed in the genre.

By this I mean authors who set their books far in the 'posthuman' future in which humanity has changed into immortal computer programs inhabiting changeable bodies. A big problem with this kind of science fiction is that it has given up on any attempt to provide something meaningful for those of us who happen to live our lives as lumps of flesh in the here and now.

Another problematic group of writers has chosen almost the polar opposite direction. They write the kind of science fiction that they were enthusiastic about in their youth. They write more or less the same books that Robert A. Heinlein and his contemporaries wrote five or six decades ago.

A third problem is formed by those SF books that cannot be considered as serious science fiction. These books do not deal with ideas, alternatives, or new viewpoints; they don't make you think or interpret the world from a fresh angle. These books include everything linked with movies, television shows, or superheroes. They also include hermetic series about space wars, future warfare, or wars in alternative history.

After all this rubbish, we are left with the nucleus of serious science fiction that aims to discuss those very matters that SF has always known how to discuss: what might our future look like, what choices should we make, how does it feel to be human in a constantly changing reality?

I am also confused by the fact that a big part of recent science fiction is very pessimistic. I'm worried about the return of science fiction for children and teens in the form of dystopias. I'm naïve enough to believe that we would feel better if we read books about a future worth living for.

I'm also naïve enough to believe that we have all the information we need to create such a future. Why, then, do so few science fiction writers describe such a possibility nowadays?

To sum things up: I don't see science fiction as a unified genre, but as a type of literature that is divided into several branches. Some of these branches I consider dead ends, while others I view as entertainment that does not interest me. But science fiction worth reading is certainly still published, books that challenge their readers and that you can debate with.

NALO HOPKINSON

NEW PERSPECTIVES FOR SPECULATIVE FICTION

Nalo Hopkinson is a Caribbean author and a professor of Creative Writing at the University of California Riverside. Her distinctive speculative fiction depicts relationships between genders and races seasoned with Caribbean and African mythologies. Her work is a treasure trove for seekers of new perspectives and wider definitions of what science fiction and fantasy can be.

Critics have tried fitting Hopkinson's body of work into many categories. She has been considered to represent both feminist and black science fiction, as well as postcolonial queer literature and Afro-Caribbean magical realism. She has won and been nominated for numerous awards for her novels and short stories, editorial work, and radio plays, including the World Fantasy Award, Locus Award, James Tiptree Jr. Award, Sunburst Award and the Spectrum Award.

The cultures of the African diaspora and Caribbean are visible on every level of Hopkinson's writing, from the language – her novels often use creole and other less commonly seen language types alongside standard English – to the narratives and characters. Colonialism, slavery, and emancipation are common reference points in her writing. More often than not, Hopkinson offers an alternative point of view on historical events and the tropes of science fiction and fantasy.

Having grown up the daughter of a poet and a librarian, Hopkinson counts a broad range of authors as her literary influences. They include Samuel R. Delany, Octavia Butler, Charles R. Saunders, Ursula Le Guin, Ray Bradbury, Elizabeth Lynn, Kim Stanley Robinson, Gene Wolfe, James Morrow, and William Shakespeare, just to name a few.

Hopkinson's own literary career began in the 1990s. Many characteristics typical to Hopkinson's writing can already be seen in her first novel, The Brown Girl in the Ring (1998). Set in a near future Toronto, it is a coming of age story for its female protagonist. It combines a traditional cyberpunk urban dystopia with Caribbean mysticism and magic while examining the themes forgiveness and guilt.

Her second novel, Midnight Robber (2000), is the most linguistically original and thematically heavy of Hopkinson's work. Although all her novels have been seasoned with the rich cultures of the Caribbean islands, the story of the Midnight Robber has been marinated and steeped in them through and through. It is set in the far future on the colony planets that have primarily been settled by the descendants of Caribbean peoples, providing an alternative cultural take on traditional science fiction narratives and tropes. Hopkinson also created a language for the dialogue in the book that is a mixture of creole and other forms of English spoken in the Caribbean.

The Nebula-nominated Salt Roads (2004) is probably Hopkinson's most ambitious novel. Salt Roads is a very unusual novel that treads on its own sorrowful, salt-paved paths. Hopkinson subtly reveals social divisions and the unjust ways in which people treat each other. She leads the reader through the mud and the muck, but ultimately shows that happiness – or at least some kind of inner harmony – can be found almost anywhere.

Hopkinson's fourth novel The New Moon's Arms (2007) could be called an everyday fantasy. The novel might feel like a radical departure from her three previous novels, but when considering the author's short stories, the novel is not as much of an outlier. The New Moon's Arms also breaks ties with Hopkinson's earlier novels in that it is lighter in tone, and frequently puts a grin on the reader's face.

The Chaos (2012) is her first foray into young adult fiction. The novel is an urban fantasy whose main character's difficulties growing up as a girl of mixed heritage are intertwined with a supernatural disaster that threatens to engulf her city. The book's strengths are in its nuanced approach to identity as well as the wide range of mythologies that are the inspiration for the supernatural elements of the story.

Hopkinson's most recent novel Sister Mine (2013) continues in the vein of urban fantasy. It fluently marries mythology and urban folklore with its main character's personal journey of self-discovery. The heart of this story is in the complicated familial relationships of the main characters as well as in its marriage of the supernatural and the commonplace.

In addition to novels, Hopkinson is an accomplished author of short stories. Hopkinson is skilled at creating fascinating situations and makes great use of the available space. Her short stories are concise and powerful packages that examine a wide variety of themes, from sexuality to race or the search for one's identity.

So far Hopkinson has published three short story collections. Skin Folk (2001) collects Hopkinson's short stories from the early stages of her career. Report from Planet Midnight (2012), which is part of PM Press's Outspoken Authors series, collects two short stories, an interview with Hopkinson and a speech she gave at the International Conference of the Fantastic in the Arts. Her most recent collection, Falling in Love with Hominids (2015), presents more than a dozen years of Hopkinson's new, uncollected fiction.

Hopkinson has also worked on the other side of the table as an editor of several anthologies. To date she's edited four short story collections: Whispers from the Cotton Tree Root (2000), Mojo: Conjure Stories (2003), So Long Been Dreaming (2004), and Tesseract Nine (2005). These anthologies are definitely recommended reading for anyone looking for perspectives differing from the science fiction and fantasy norm.

Hopkinson is currently balancing her teaching duties with her work in progress, a novel called Blackheart Man. Her hobbies include sewing, crafting objects, designing fabric, and cooking. Check out her website and blog at <http://nalohopkinson.com/>.

As a final note, if you want to make a good first impression on Nalo at Worldcon or elsewhere, make sure to pronounce her first name NAH-lo. Not NAY-lo and certainly not NIGH-lo.

Abridged, translated and partially updated by J. Robert Tupasela based on the article "Tummaa hunajaa" by Aleksi Kuutio, first published in Tähtivaeltaja magazine issue 2/2011.

JOHANNA SINISALO

BREAKING THE THOUGHT PATTERNS

I've been dreaming of living in a magnificent treehouse the last few nights as I have been pondering the wonder of Johanna Sinisalo. A treehouse in the wilderness that might as well be the literal manifestation of one of Sinisalo's books. When I was asked to write this appreciation, I quickly said yes because Sinisalo is one of the most interesting and caring writers I have ever had the pleasure to know. And now my dreams confirm it.

Yet, what can I say about this magnificent writer that hasn't already been said? She has received recognition and awards such as the prestigious Finlandia award and the Tiptree award. Translated into many different languages, her body of work – novels, short stories, screenplays and non-fiction – tackles challenging subjects fearlessly and without apology.

I first met Johanna back in 2006 – my first trip to Finland. She went out of her way to make my husband and I feel welcome. At that time, I didn't know a lot about her or her work, but I quickly became a fan (and a friend). Some of you may have heard me refer to my "Finnish Family." Although not related by blood, in many ways I do consider her part of my family. We share so much more than our mutual love of weird fiction – she is my sister-by-choice. And it was during this trip that I was introduced to Moomin. I am wearing my favorite Moomin t-shirt as I sit here writing this tribute. I wonder how different I would be had I grown up reading Tove Jansson instead of L. Frank Baum.

As I was doing research to learn as much as I could about Johanna, I found out that one of her earliest influences came in the form of Donald Duck comic books (written by Carl Barks)! How wonderful is that??? How can you not fall in love with someone who loves Donald Duck? No Mickey Mouse for her. Why focus on the more famous, yet dull and dreary star, when you can read about the adventure of a more interesting character like Donald? (Perhaps this also explains why so many are usually drawn to the bass player in a band, instead of the lead singer or guitarist).

I also discovered that she spent a year writing for a soap opera. Now, I can imagine other writers taking this assignment and simply dialing it in, not embracing it fully. Sinisalo, on the other hand, used this as an opportunity to refine and improve her craft as a writer. And she spent this time adding more inspiration for other works. And no apologies, either.

Johanna Sinisalo is a force of nature. And a force FOR nature. Through her fiction she continues to explore relationships between people and all the creatures of the world (real or imagined) and beyond. She ponders so many questions that compel us to take a closer look at ourselves and our own preconceived ideas of the world around us. The things that happen in her novels and stories make their own kind of sense, follow their own kind of logic.

In part, this means that when people hear the name Johanna Sinisalo, usually the first thing that comes to mind is 'weird' writer, or more closely 'Finnish weird' writer. And yes, this is true. Much of what Sinisalo writes could be considered weird. However, I see her work in a different light. Her fiction makes me think of the natural world, and in some cases I view her work as being more 'natural' than otherworldly. Perhaps this is because I have immersed myself in weird fiction for so many years. But maybe it's more likely that there is a strand of nature that runs all through her work. After all, she sees the underlying beauty of the natural world and considers it as a sanctuary for us, and not something to be afraid of.

Sinisalo's fiction also plays around with stereotypes and prejudices. When I think about stereotypes, I am reminded of something written by the journalist Walter Lippman in his 1922 book Public Opinion. He wrote, "The slightly familiar is seen as very familiar and the somewhat strange as sharply alien." Our personally devised stereotypes create blind spots in our perception of the world. Sinisalo seeks to break these thought patterns with her fiction. She pushes the stereotypes to the extremes so that we cannot ignore them, cannot look away.

For example, in her novel The Core of the Sun she presents an alternate version of present day Finland. After Finland receives its independence from Russia in the early 20th century, the newly formed government is a Eustocracy, promoting the health and well-being of its citizens. However, this is pursued through genetic engineering and selective breeding of humans into different sub-species based on their primary purpose in life. The Eloi, aka femiwomen, have been bred for procreation and a life that is eerily like the 1950s. The Morlocks, aka the neuterwomen, are excluded from reproduction and serve as a disposable labor force. All the citizens of this country are forced to the farthest edges of their assigned genders. By pushing to the extremes, the reader is forced to confront these stereotypes head-on and challenge what it does to our perception of gender and roles.

In her short story “Baby Doll” she uncovers the truth about sexualizing children; something that has become a part of our popular culture. In this story, the children are pushed into becoming sexual beings long before they can understand anything about it. The story is shocking to the reader, and yet what Sinisalo shows us isn't that far from the reality we encounter each day on TV or in the movies.

Make no mistake; Sinisalo is not chastising us. Rather she is encouraging us to look closer and notice the power we have to make a difference in the world. In her capable hands, we are able to discover how alike we really are. It is these connections that Sinisalo makes – between humankind and nature, between genders, the past and the future – that force us to question ourselves. And we forgive her for showing us a side of humanity that isn't complimentary. No one else can do this with quite such flair and boldness. She sees connections where the rest of us only see walls and division. Instead of fearing the other, she demands that we embrace the other. That, in the end, is perhaps her most remarkable accomplishment.

JEAN-PIERRE BRULIS

CLAIRE WENDLING

A CHAMELEON OF MULTIPLE STYLES AND TOOLS

Welcome to the world of Claire Wendling, my English-speaking friend. To a world of delicate and frail beauty, of sensuality and whimsy, and of barbarians and damsels in distress. There is precious little published by Claire Wendling in English, so you are forgiven of not being knowledgeable of her, a predicament I hope to shed some light on with this little piece. Or, as the case might be better proposed by, take a good look at her gallery inside this magnificent souvenir book. Her pictures surely speak for themselves much better than I could ever hope to do.

Born in Montpellier, in southern France, she resides now in Angoulême, a city known mostly for its annual International Comics Festival, and where Claire has been honoured several times, and she has been infusing art for her whole life. Claire says, that she has always drawn, known instinctively how to draw, spending many a day with pencils and paper in her hands, drawing everything and “letting the hand do most of the work while her mind searches for lines to use.”

She studied comics at the École des Beaux-Arts (School of Fine Arts of) Angoulême, and won the “Alph’Art Avenir” (Artist of the Future) prize at the Comics Festival in 1989. Her ambition of the time was to make animations, but unfortunately the school had disbanded that line before she enrolled.

As a comics artist, the one project Claire is best known for is a series of comics called Les Lumières de l’Amalou. She (with writer Christophe Gibelin) won the Press award for it at Angoulême in 1991. It has taken a long time for the English-language world to be able to read the series, but at the end of this year, The Lights of Amalou is being published in the USA. An anthology of all five albums, it is a delightful fantasy that should bring her more Anglo-fans, other than those few, who have seen her covers for various DC and Marvel comics. The singular book allows the reader to not only read the entire story, but also to witness the stylistic changes and growing confidence of her drawings, the way the line turns from proficiency to professionalism.

In 1997, a longtime dream came true when she was hired by Warner Studios to act as a freelance concept artist in a major animated film, The Quest for Camelot. Unfortunately, the climate, and dislike of the “industrial” approach to drawing, ended her career in Los Angeles and she returned back in Europe after eight months, continuing to do an array of small projects including comics, posters, illustrations, and collections of her own work, with even some work for the French Postal services. At the turn of the Millennium, Claire tackled a new field, when she did graphic design work for the video game Alone in the Dark IV.

Claire doesn't really see herself as a comics artist, but as an illustrator. And illustrations she has done. She has published several collections of her art and sketches. In some way, those collections are the true Claire Wendling: an artist of study and exploration, as she meticulously examines her body of work, reimagining it for the collections, and tries to be a better artist by doing this.

There's a lightness in her drawings that makes them look so effortless. A lot of silliness and fun, and a whole heap of frail beauty as well. There are names that come to mind, when one looks at her pictures. Mike Mignola. Regis Loisel. Jean Giraud. Jeffrey Catherine Jones. Frank Frazetta. Egon Schiele. Alphonse Mucha. But in the end, it is very much Claire Wendling, at times a chameleon of multiple styles and tools.

One of the things one hears about Claire is that she is an artist's author. It is true that she while she is not one of the most prolific or well-known artists in the world, her name lights up a smile and a twinkle in the eyes of many who are said to both prolific and well-known. Perhaps one of the best examples of her recognition among her peers is the 2016 Grand Prix de la ville d'Angoulême, when she was one of the three finalists chosen by the entire voting body of the Festival.

Claire has been strongly influenced by Japanese art and manga, as is easy to see from her plentiful sketches of animals and animorphs. There is also a solid base of sword and sorcery, barbarians, sexy pin ups, and jungle animals. She covers a lot of stylistic ground, from loose, gestural drawing to detailed rendering. Her style is all about figurative, natural and expressive line work, sometimes finished in inks and watercolours, but often left in raw pencil sketch format. Often looking deceptively simple, yet always breathtakingly beautiful.

In the summer of 2013, Claire suffered a major kidney failure. A whole cluster of ailments and illnesses pained and haunted her for the following three years. She has been through a lot, but the road to recovery has been also educational. She has been forced to learn to live, and to make art, again.

Claire has written: "It's taken a lot of work to be able to draw again. I was only drawing on and off for three years and that's definitely not enough to keep your imagination and skills going. I've spent four months trying to recover all of that, doing one or two small jobs, besides practicing every day. I'm like an athlete who was forced to stop doing their sport due to a serious injury. There needs to be a strong will to continue and get back in the game."

Luckily for all of us, Claire is back in business, with a new collection of illustrations last year and the English-language edition of Les Lumières de l'Amalou coming out at the end of 2017. The world needs more Claire Wendling art.

If this is the first time you get to know Claire Wendling, I envy you. You have an interesting voyage ahead of you!

WORLDCON! FRANCE! NICE!

A bid to bring the Worldcon to France for the first time
August 2nd to August 6th, 2023

In its long history, the Worldcon has travelled around the world, but has never visited France. Yet, France has played a major role in the birth of Science Fiction. Most notably, of course, through Jules Verne. But he was not the first to dabble in the genre. Other French writers who paved the way include Rabelais, Cyrano de Bergerac, Voltaire, Balzac, Baudelaire, Albert Robida, J.-H. Rosny, Sr., Maurice Leblanc, Gustave Le Rouge, and Maurice Renard.

France has also given the world many other famous creative minds, such as illustrator Mœbius, film director Georges Méliès or cult rock band Magma (if you don't know their connection to SF, you should look them up!)

Passionate members of French fandom have decided it is time to bring Worldcon to France! In fact, we believe it is long overdue.

And where better to host this than the beautiful and sunny southern city of Nice?

Our planned facility, the Acropolis, is a modern venue which can accomodate all the needs of such an event.

So come help us make this a reality! Let's bring the Worldcon to the country of Captain Nemo, Fantomas and... the Planet of the Apes!

WALTER JON WILLIAMS

EXPLORING THE VAST CANDY STORE OF SCIENCE FICTION

Of the Worldcon 75 Guests of Honour, Walter Jon Williams (b. Duluth, Minnesota 1953) is probably the one with the most diverse literary CV. His first five published books were not science fiction at all, but historical maritime novels. When that market faltered, Williams had to find a new line of work. He was dashing off different proposals to publishers and, fortunately, it was a science fiction idea that was accepted.

“ I honestly hadn't intended to become a science fiction writer, but it turned out lucky that I did. The response I got to all my other proposals is that they were just too weird. You hardly ever hear that as a criticism in science fiction.

(FLYOVER FANDOM INTERVIEW, 2017)

His first science fiction novel, Ambassador of Progress, is a work of anthropological science fiction. It describes the efforts of Fiona, a diplomat trying to broker peace between two warring factions on a dry, primitive planet.

Since then, Williams has not written any other works of anthropological science fiction. Instead, he has ventured into cyberpunk, space opera, military scifi, alternative history, fantasy, near-future thrillers, a Star Wars novel, and a series of capers about interplanetary thievery. In October, Williams will return to fantasy, with the first part of the new series “Quillifer”.

His habit of genre-hopping may have confused some readers, but Williams has felt no desire to restrict himself to a narrow range of styles.

“ I tend to view science fiction as a vast candy store, filled with all sorts of exotic goodies, and I want to try them all.

(FILE 770, 2017)

In addition to writing novels and short fiction, Williams has – among other things – also contributed to Wild Cards novels, worked on computer and role-playing games, and movie scripts. He has been nominated multiple times for both Hugo and Nebula Awards and won Nebulas for the novelette “Daddy's Room” and the novella “The Green Leopard Plague”.

Telling stories became a passion for him from an early age. He dictated his first stories to his parents before he could read and write. According to the author, his juvenile works (including a 450-page fantasy epic he wrote at age 13) were less than stellar in quality, but still had their use as a part of the process of learning the craft.

“ You have to produce two million words of crap before writing anything that anyone would want to read. I believe I got rid of my two million words of crap before I was 20.

(JOHNMAC RADIO SHOW INTERVIEW, 2014.)

HARDWIRED

Williams had his breakthrough with his eighth novel in 1986, when the dystopian cyberpunk novel Hardwired was published. Inspired by Roger Zelazny's Damnation

Arkihuolesi kaikki heitä

CHRIS WEITZ

New York on kaaoksessa, ja henkiin jääneet nuoret kerääntyvät heimoihin. Hengästyttävää toimintaa!

Alley, it became one of the keystone works of the cyberpunk genre.

Roger Zelazny called Hardwired a “tough, sleek juggernaut of a story, punctuated by strobe light movements, coursing to the wail of jets and the twang of steel guitars – glittering, nasty, and noble – and told in a style perfectly suiting its content. It has all of my favorite things – blood, love, fire, hate and a high ideal or two. I wish I’d written this one.”

The year after Hardwired came out, Williams set off in a completely different direction and published The Crown Jewels, a comedy about “the allowed burglar” Drake Maijstral, operating in an aristocratic interstellar society where thievery is legal, as long as it is done with style.

His longest ongoing series is Dread Empire’s Fall, started in 2002 with The Praxis, set in a galactic empire facing chaos and civil war after the old ruling race, the Shaa, dies out.

Writing it, Williams found himself in familiar territory.

“ I wrote a deliberately retro space opera series, Dread Empire’s Fall. I hadn’t actually approached that kind of series before and I wanted to see if it could contain all the classical elements of a space opera (including a space empire and rebellion and space battles and the threat of genocide, and so forth) and not have it be ridiculous. The writing ended up being very familiar. Even though I’d rarely written space opera, the experience was like meeting old friends, because I started my career writing sea adventure books and now I found myself again on ships with a strict class hierarchy and a lot of jargon to deal with.

(LOCUS, 2007)

After a break, this series is set to continue with three new novels. The first one, The Accidental War, will be published in 2018.

Some of his early books have been hard to find, but in recent years, Williams has been working to ensure that his back catalogue is available in ebook form. He is very critical of how the publishing industry operates these days, throwing out new writers if they don’t have bestsellers right out of the door, wringing out the last cents of profit from older books while doing little to promote them.

In consequence, Williams has not only been reaching out to his readers, but writers as well. Recognizing how hard it is for new writers to get their first break, Williams started the Taos Toolbox in 2006, a two-week workshop for aspiring writers of science fiction and fantasy.

“ I realized that after a certain amount of time in the field I’d learned a lot, and I was compelled to start teaching it. I want to pay forward to the next generation of writers. They're going to have a tougher time than I had.

(THE WRITER UNDERGROUND, 2011)

FINNISH ROOTS

For Worldcon 75, inviting Walter Jon Williams to be one of our Guests of Honor makes perfect sense, as there is a connection already. Williams will be visiting the country from which all four of his grandparents emigrated to the United States.

The name Williams is not typically Finnish. But then, it was bestowed on his paternal grandfather while he was working as a lumberjack in Canada.

“When the Welsh foreman asked him his name, and was told “Kuusikoski” my grandfather was told, “From now on your name is Williams.” And that was the name he used when he came to the U.S.

(BLACK GATE, 2012)

Williams now lives in New Mexico, where his family settled when the future writer was 13. Apart from writing, his interests include travelling the world, kenpo karate, cooking and scuba diving.

“I'm hardly ever bored. There's always something interesting to do, or read, or look at, or dream about. I haven't stopped the dreaming, and I don't plan to.

KAREN LORD

TOASTMISTRESS

Karen Lord, our toastmistress, is a writer, teacher, and former diplomat, research consultant and part-time soldier. Luckily for us, today she is a writer most of all. Her works include science fiction and fantasy novels that all broaden our conception of those genres, as well as what it means to be human in either our multicultural societies of today, or in the multi-species communities of imagined futures and pasts.

Karen Lord was born in Barbados in 1968, but spent much of her youth elsewhere: studying physics in Canada, science politics in Scotland, and the sociology of religion in Bangor, Wales. In 2010, she published Redemption in Indigo, a fantasy novel based on the Senegalese fairy tale about Ansigé Karamba the Glutton and his long-suffering wife Paama, whose skill in cooking up the right mixture of fantasy and reality attracts the attention of the spider-god Anansi. The novel won much acclaim for its cultural sensitivity as well as its juggling of character perspectives, and it received the both the Crawford Award and the Mythopoeic Award in 2011. Lord followed its success with two science fiction novels, The Best of All Possible Worlds (2013) and The Galaxy Game (2015), both of which focus on the experiences of uprootedness and loss when individuals find themselves the last survivors of their communities. In both of these novels the depiction of planetary societies is complex and sensitive to the variety of human experience, and they draw in equal measure from the household names of SF history and from the best-loved classics of English literature.

In addition to her novels, she has also written nonfiction and short stories, and in 2016 she edited an anthology of Caribbean speculative fiction: New Worlds, Old Ways. This year, she is also exploring new storytelling conventions as part of the team writing the third season Tremontaine, a set of stories situated in Ellen Kushner's Riverside world and published as a serial following the conventions of TV-drama.

Toastmaster, for those not familiar with the term, is an Anglo-American tradition of having a specific person in charge of a formal dinner or a speaking event. His or her job is to help to create a relaxed atmosphere, introduce speakers and help to keep the event on schedule. In Worldcons, toastmaster/mistress hosts or co-hosts opening and closing ceremonies as well as the other events, such as the Hugo Awards ceremony.

Authored by practicing scientists as well as writers of hard science fiction, these books explore and exploit the borderlands between accepted science and its fictional counterpart. Uncovering mutual influences, promoting fruitful interaction, narrating and analyzing fictional scenarios, together they serve as a reaction vessel for inspired new ideas in science, technology, and beyond.

The Science Fact & Science Fiction Concatenation

The seasonal science and SF news and reviews site

A site run by scientists and engineers into science fiction.

Some of us greatly enjoyed meeting some of you at the 2017 Helsinki Worldcon in this our 30th year and the 80th year since the Earth's first SF convention. (We entertain the likelihood that an SF convention was previously held elsewhere). Our first decade from 1987 saw annual print editions before moving to cyberspace.

If you are not already, do join us each spring, summer and autumn for a round-up of SF news covering publishing, cinema and television, as well as forthcoming British (many soon to be available elsewhere in Europe, N. America and Australasia) SF/F/fantastical H, SF non-fiction and science booklists and news from the science fact-fiction interface, presented in a simple, largely text-only, information-rich style. In between our seasonal editions there are our selections as to the best of the one-page Nature 'Futures' stories (as PDFs).

And now the hard sell. We do seek bullet-point news as to national-level SF conventions and awards. We also welcome reviews of national-level convention and (with advance negotiation) articles on SF and science.

IAN STEWART

THE SCIENCE GUEST OF HONOUR

Ian Stewart was born in 1945 and educated at Cambridge (MA) and Warwick (PhD). He is a multiple Emeritus Professor, has five honorary doctorates and is an honorary wizard of Unseen University on Discworld.

Professor Stewart is best known for his popular science writing – mainly on mathematical themes. He is one of the UK’s most prolific popularisers of mathematics and has published more than 120 books on a number of different fields of science. But he may be best known for his The Science of Discworld series he co-wrote with Sir Terry Pratchett and Jack Cohen. With Cohen, Stewart has also written two science fiction novels, Wheeler and Heaven, and one of his own called Jack of All Trades. His latest novel is The Living Labyrinth (with Tim Poston), which came out last year with a sequel on the way. He has won numerous prizes in the academic field, was a Hugo Nominee in 2000, and was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 2001.

Professor Stewart once brought a live tiger into the lecture room. He didn’t get banned for it.

He is an active research mathematician with over 180 published papers, and he currently works on pattern formation, chaos, network dynamics, and biomathematics.

He lives in Coventry and is married (46 years and counting) with two sons and three grandchildren.

“Writing for a different audience makes you rethink everything – often you find that as you try to explain things to an audience who do not understand things perfectly well, you realise you don’t understand it as well as you thought. And so you get feedback in both directions.”

DR. KJELL N. LINDGREN

SPECIAL GUEST

Dr. Kjell N. Lindgren was born in Taipei, Taiwan, and lived in the midwestern United States, but spent most of his childhood overseas living in England. After completing his freshman year at Lakenheath High School in the United Kingdom, he returned to the U.S. to complete his education, and participated in Virginia's Governor's School at William and Mary College during the summer of 1990. He graduated from James W. Robinson Secondary School in Fairfax, Virginia in 1991, and then earned a Bachelor of Science degree in Biology (with a minor in Mandarin Chinese) from the U.S. Air Force Academy in 1995, where he was a member of the "Wings of Blue" parachute team, serving as an instructor, a jumpmaster and a member of the academy's intercollegiate national championship team.

He received a Master of Science degree in Cardiovascular Physiology from Colorado State University (CSU) in 1996, for which he conducted cardiovascular countermeasure research in the Space Physiology Lab at NASA Ames Research Center in Sunnyvale, California.

Dr. Lindgren subsequently earned a Doctorate of Medicine from the University of Colorado in 2002, where he conducted high-altitude physiology research; he then completed a three-year residency in emergency medicine, including a year as chief resident at Hennepin County Medical Center in Minneapolis, Minnesota in 2005. After acquiring a National Library of Medicine Post-Doctoral Fellowship and a Master of Health Informatics degree at the University of Minnesota in 2006, Dr. Lindgren completed a two-year residency in aerospace medicine (2008) and a Master of Public Health degree (2007) at the University of Texas Medical Branch (UTMB) in Galveston, Texas, and became board-certified in emergency and aerospace medicine.

Dr. Lindgren began working at Johnson Space Center in 2007. As a Wyle-University of Texas Medical Branch flight surgeon, he supported International Space Station (ISS) training and operations in Star City, Russia and water survival training in the Ukraine. After serving as the Deputy Crew Surgeon for STS-130 and Expedition 24, Dr. Lindgren was selected by NASA as an astronaut in June 2009 as one of 14 members of the 20th NASA astronaut class. Following the completion of two years of training and evaluation, he was assigned technical duties in the Spacecraft Communicator (CAPCOM) branch and Extravehicular Activity (EVA) branch. Dr. Lindgren served as lead CAPCOM for Expedition 30. He flew on Expedition 44/45 and logged 141 days in space on the ISS from July 2015 to December 2015, participating in two spacewalks and in more than a hundred different scientific experiments.

While on his ISS mission, Dr. Lindgren was a Special Guest of Honor at The 73rd World Science Fiction Convention (Sasquan) in 2015, providing several taped broadcasts to the convention from the International Space Station.

Dr. Lindgren is married to the former Kristiana Jones, and they have three children. His parents, Randahl and Anita Lindgren, reside in Burke, Virginia, and his sister, Niki Lindgren, lives in Los Angeles, California. Dr. Lindgren's interests include spending time with his family, running, reading, movies, photography, amateur astronomy and church activities.

Dr. Kjell N. Lindgren's honors, awards, and recognitions include:

- NASA Distinguished Service Medal (2016)
- NASA Space Flight Medal (2016)
- NASA Exceptional Achievement Medal (2013)
- UTMB Outstanding Resident Award (2008)
- Distinguished Graduate, U.S. Air Force Primary Flight Surgeon Course (2007)
- William K. Douglas Aerospace Medicine Scholarship (2007)
- Hippocrates Award, University of Colorado School of Medicine (2002)
- Richard C. Hardin Award, University of Colorado School of Medicine (2001)
- Alpha Omega Alpha Honor Society (2001)
- Edgar and Marion Adler Scholar, University of Colorado School of Medicine (2001, 2002)
- U.S. Air Force Achievement Medal (1998).

Dr. Lindgren is a member of the following organizations:

- Fellow of the Aerospace Medical Association
- Fellow of the American Academy of Emergency Medicine
- Member of the Association of Space Explorers
- American Medical Informatics Association
- Alpha Omega Alpha Medical Honor Society
- Space Medicine Association
- Christian Medical and Dental Associations and National Eagle Scout Association

Dr. Lindgren's name is pronounced CHELL LIND-grin.

EIGHT GREAT BLUNDERS OF FINNISH HISTORY

AND ONE SWEET MOMENT OF VICTORY

The history of Finland is full of failures. Eight of them are presented here, topped with one glorious success.

1. FINLAND IS SETTLED IN 9,000 BCE

In the beginning, Finland was covered in ice. About 11,000 years ago, things started to happen: the ice began to melt. When enough ground was unfrozen, the ancestors of the Finns arrived. The land was empty and no one else seemed interested in it.

In the dismal darkness of November, blasted in the face full force by sleet, Finns often wonder what stroke of genius led our distant ancestors to this godforsaken corner of the earth. The ancient Finns might have been deceived. For about two thousand years after the ice age, the climate was significantly warmer than now. When it cooled down again, it was already too late. The Finns couldn't be bothered to leave.

Throughout the millennia, Finland has received plenty of inhabitants from other areas. For example, some smart guys came along 4,000 to 5,000 years ago with a Finno-Ugric language that is difficult to understand and speak unless you start practicing it from the cradle.

According to current scientific opinion, there are no gaps in the settlement of Finland: today's Finns are the descendants of all those people who made the mistake of coming here. For our miserable climate and weird language, we have no one to blame but ourselves.

2. THE SWEDES ARRIVE

The next significant event in Finnish history is the arrival of the Swedes. The Vikings had occasionally attempted to gain a foothold in Finland. Shrewd Vikings would not try this, however. There was hardly anything worth looting in Finland, but what there was, the natives would defend with surprising obstinacy. The Finns had a warning system based on beacons, which foiled the Vikings' best and only military tactic: raiding. The Vikings had to settle for trading with the Finns instead.

In the 11th century, southwestern Finland was already under Swedish influence and had been Christianized. The time during which Finland is considered to have been under Swedish rule is estimated as having started in the mid-12th century. In the probable course of events, the Christian inhabitants of southwestern Finland asked Sweden for help when the pagan inland Finns and/or the Novgorodians started to harass them.

The Swedes hastened to the rescue, bringing along more religion, government, and civilization. It has sometimes been said that Sweden conquered and colonized Finland, but this is not true. Instead, Sweden spread itself out over the area of Finland approximately at the same rate as the Catholic church did.

On the other hand, if you ever find yourself in a situation where you have to choose colonial overlords for yourself, we can put in a good word for the Swedes: they're quite all right.

3. FINLAND BECOMES A PART OF RUSSIA

In the mid-18th century, Sweden wanted to consolidate its presence in Finland. Construction began on the fortress of Sveaborg, known today as Suomenlinna, on an island off the shore of Helsinki. The Russians took this as provocation, which was more or less the intention. The relationship between Sweden and Russia became tense, although it had never been very good to begin with.

The Napoleonic wars in the early 19th century changed the history of Finland. How this happened was a minor incident in the entirety of the wars. Emperors Napoleon and Alexander I made an alliance, agreeing in passing that Napoleon wouldn't mind if Russia were to snatch Finland from Sweden. Russia got down to business and attacked Finland in the late winter of 1808.

A third of the Finnish army – this name was used for the Finnish troops of the Swedish army – were behind the walls of Sveaborg. Their cunning military plan consisted of holding out the siege until the sea ice melted and the Swedish navy could sail to the rescue.

The Russians employed every trick in the book of psychological warfare and succeeded in getting the commander of Sveaborg, Carl Olof Cronstedt, to hand over the strong and well-equipped fortress after a couple of months of siege, practically without having to fire a single shot. Cronstedt's decision has been marveled at for the past two centuries and more. Apparently the commander was personally peeved at the king of Sweden, Gustav IV Adolf, who had appointed him in charge of a frozen piece of rock in the miserable hinterland of the kingdom. He was not the only one angry; Gustav IV Adolf was not a popular king. Perhaps Cronstedt counted on the Russians to conquer Finland again, occupy it for a few years, and then leave – the Russians had a habit of doing this, twice in the 18th century alone. However, the crisis would be severe enough to make it highly likely for Sweden to find a new ruler.

Cronstedt miscalculated. The Russians came to Finland for good. In 1809, Finland was incorporated into the Russian empire as an autonomous grand duchy.

4. FINLAND GAINS INDEPENDENCE AND ALMOST BECOMES A MONARCHY

Finland declared independence almost unnoticed in December 1917. This happened at the end of long period of disputes and internal unrest. During the last 20 years of their rule, the Russians had tightened their hold on Finland, but on the eve of independence, Finns were quarreling among themselves about politics. Finland was, in fact, on its way towards a civil war, which began soon, in January 1918. The conservative Whites and the socialist Reds struggled for control of the country.

A civil war is quite possibly the single stupidest thing that any nation can undertake, and the Finnish civil war was no exception. It was very bloody, killing off about one percent of the country's population. The Spanish civil war from 1936 to 1939 also killed one percent of Spain's population, but took three years to do it. The Finns managed to slaughter each other in little more than three months.

After the war, the unity of the Finnish people was gone. The Whites had won the war, with the help of the Germans. This help did not come free of charge. In practice, Finland became a vassal state, and the search began in Germany for a king for Finland. The prince of Hesse, Friedrich Karl, was chosen for this job in the autumn of 1918. But then Germany lost the war. The Allies made it known that they would not recognize the independence of Finland before the German monarch was deposed. In an act of good statesmanship, Friedrich Karl abdicated. Finland became a republic.

In 1919, the Finns made a sensible decision for once. The social democratic party, which represented the losers of the civil war, was allowed to participate in the parliamentary election. The country was on the slow road to recovery from its internal rift. One day we may be fully recovered.

5. THE PROHIBITION

Many other countries would probably have celebrated their independence with the popping of champagne bottles, the uncorking of wine bottles, and the opening of beer taps. Finland passed the Prohibition Act as soon as the civil war was over.

Just like in other parts of the world, the prohibition did not result in a nation of teetotalers spending their time in wholesome activities. Quite the contrary: the prohibition created a widespread smuggling industry, made heroes out of criminals, and weakened general respect for the law in all of society. People drank more and moved from mild drinks to stronger ones. In addition to smuggled booze, the sale of alcohol from pharmacies for "medicinal purposes" soared from 160,000 liters in 1919 to 1,57 million liters in 1927.

When this charade had gone on long enough, a referendum was held concerning the fate of the Prohibition Act. As a result, the act was repealed in 1932. One of the groups most vehemently opposed to repealing the Prohibition Act consisted of the fishermen of the coastal regions. Smuggling booze in their boats was a much more lucrative activity than fishing.

The legacy of the prohibition can still be felt in Finnish nightlife in the form of various rules and regulations concerning the sale and consumption of alcohol. If you wonder why a certain bar in Helsinki still employs a person specifically for the purpose of handing customers their beers from the door of the bar to the terrace, the reason can be found in the Prohibition Act.

6. THE THREE WARS OF WORLD WAR II

The political situation in Europe and the whole world became strained in the 1930s. In the second half of the decade, both Finland and Sweden attempted to avoid war with the Soviet Union and Germany. Sweden succeeded in this, but Finland ended up fighting against both enemies, although fortunately not at the same time.

World War II in Finland actually meant three wars fought for different reasons and partly against different parties. The first of these, the Winter War of 1939–40, broke out because Stalin and Hitler divided Eastern Europe into spheres of interest in August 1939. Finland and the Baltic states fell within the Soviet Union's sphere of interest. The Soviet Union pressured Finland and the Baltic states to allow military bases to be built in their area. Finland would not yield under pressure, and in late November 1939, the Soviet Union attacked. Against all odds, the Finns managed to repel the attack. Finland's resources were meager, however, so the war could not last long. Peace was concluded in March 1940, and Finland ceded areas, including the Karelian Isthmus, to the Soviet Union.

The next war, the Continuation War, broke out in the summer of 1941. Now Finland and Germany were the aggressors. Allying with Nazi Germany cannot be justified by any means. Finland was protected against the worst Nazi follies by the fact that the democratic system creaked along somehow through the war years. With German support, the Finns thought they could get back the areas that the Soviet Union had unjustly taken.

Attacking Russia has never proven to be a good solution. After a great initial success, the Continuation War was bogged down in trench warfare until the summer of 1944, when the Soviet Union undertook a major assault. Somehow, the Finns repelled it and managed to extricate themselves from the war. Now Finland lost for good the areas ceded in the Winter War, and some more land to boot.

Finland switched sides to the Allies, which meant that the Finns started yet another war, this time against the Germans, who had occupied Lapland. The Lapland War was the third and final war that Finland waged during World War II. The last of the Germans were forced out of Finnish territory at the end of April 1945.

7. KEKKONEN

"This would never have happened under Kekkonen", Finns still tend to say over 35 years after Urho Kekkonen's presidency. While Urho Kekkonen was in office (1956–81), Finns were happiest when nothing happened. The cold war was on and Finland was in a tight spot.

Finland had Western political and economic systems, but the treaty of friendship, co-operation, and mutual assistance signed with the Soviet Union in 1948 did not leave much freedom of action. Finland was a neutral country, but there was talk of "Finlandization", the invisible influence of the Soviet Union in Finnish politics.

Kekkonen was a skilled politician who managed to have his cake and eat it too. He kept Finland a Western country that was friendly with the Soviet Union. This friendship meant flourishing trade relations. The Soviets would accept even second-rate goods, trading cheap oil and nuclear reactors in return.

Even though Kekkonen was in many ways the right man in the right place, by the 1970s, his great power as president began to be felt. He had his term of office extended by emergency law in 1973. In the 1978 presidential election, he stood as a normal candidate, if the word "normal" can be used in this case. A total of nine parties from all reaches of Finnish politics had nominated him, and he won by a landslide.

Kekkonen reached the height of his popularity in 1975, when the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe was organized in Helsinki. In the same year, Kekkonen turned 75 years old, an icebreaker was named after him, his face was printed on the 500 mark bill, and to top it all, he was voted the sexiest man in Finland in a magazine competition.

In reality, Kekkonen's mental and physical state deteriorated quickly towards the end of the 1970s, but this was concealed from the citizenry. During his last years in office, Kekkonen was a sick old man whose immediate circles kept up appearances and used power in his name.

After Kekkonen's time in office, a law was passed requiring the president to have regular medical check-ups and to report the results in public.

8. THE RISE AND FALL OF NOKIA

A great historical moment for Finland was seeing agents Mulder and Scully of the X-Files use Nokia's mobile phones for the first time in their hunt for alien critters.

Unfortunately Nokia was often thought to be a Japanese brand. It was difficult to imagine high technology coming from a distant and forested corner of Europe. In fact, Nokia started out in the wood-processing industry and also produced rubber boots and cables. In the 1990s, the company focused its efforts on electronics.

Nokia's success was a balm for Finland, which was suffering from a serious depression in the 1990s. Nokia brought wealth to the country and raised a whole generation of IT professionals.

This came to an abrupt end in the 2010s. Nokia had problems with the operating system used in its phones, which did not easily lend itself to smartphone applications. Nokia had to choose a new operating system. It almost took up Android, but finally, of all the operating systems in the world, decided on Windows. In early 2013, Nokia's CEO made a classic publicity blunder in announcing the fusion. He bad-mouthed the company's current phones and told the listeners that new Windows-based Nokia phones would not be available until the autumn.

Nokia's sales and stock value plummeted. The last nail in the coffin was that customers were not interested in the new Windows phones. Nokia's saga was over. It sold its phone production to Microsoft and remained a network manufacturer.

The fall of Nokia left Finland ankle deep in unemployed IT professionals who have gone on to found cool new startups. But we are still waiting for the new Nokia.

+ 1 GLORIOUS MOMENT OF VICTORY

"Thank you everybody, this was great fun and a good learning experience. And after all, we Finns are used to losing things (wars, Eurovision song contests) and have subtle ways to handle defeat (e.g. heavy drinking)."

In September 2013, I wrote this on the e-mail list of the Helsinki in 2015 bid, just after we had lost to Spokane by 610 votes against 645. By the way, Nokia was sold to Microsoft on the very same day. All was lost, so a month later, we launched the bid for Worldcon in 2017.

And in August 2015, we won.

I hope you enjoy the 75th World Science Fiction Convention in Helsinki!

STARTING POINT OF FINNISH SCIENCE FICTION

In 1803, Finland was part of the Kingdom of Sweden. The area was bilingual: Swedish was the language of government, academia and the upper classes, while the commoners spoke Finnish. Hardly any literature was published in Finnish even though a writing system had been devised as early as the 16th century.

The land's academic hub was Turku and its sole Finnish university the Royal Academy of Turku. In the early 19th century, one of its influential members was Gabriel Israel Hartman (1776–1809). He came from humble beginnings, but as a curious, determined and hard-working man he was able to push his way through hardships to a master's degree in 1798.

In order to support his family of seven, Hartman had to take on a great deal of additional employment alongside his poorly-paid academic work. His already frail health could not maintain the burden of too much work, and in 1809 at only 33 years old, Hartman passed away.

Hartman dedicated himself to a career in academia and was appointed as a docent, or assistant professor, in theoretical philosophy in 1802. His main philosophical work is the unfinished Kunskapslära (Doctrine of Cognition) which seeks to describe the foundations of human thinking. He makes a break with idealistic thought and emphasises the importance of research, observation, reason, and will as the basis of knowledge.

Hartman was influenced by the French Enlightenment philosophers. This is most evident in his futuristic, utopian texts which establish Hartman as the first Finnish utopian thinker.

In these writings, a recurring theme is the better, happier and wiser society of the future. Nowhere is this vision clearer than in Hartman's Poem to the Magisterial Promotion, called "Den tredje Odlingen" (The Third Culture) from 1805. In it, he divides human history into three cultural periods: the Ancients, the Enlightenment, and the Future. Only during the final period will humanity reach the highest stage. At that time, "Liberty will reign with benevolence / brotherly attitude will guide each soul / there are no tyrants, egoists or slaves".

From this misty-eyed view of the future, we step into science fiction in Hartman's magazine article "En dröm" (A Dream) in 1803. The independence in thought and imagination, so typical of Hartman, are present in this story as well, because Hartman composed it by himself, separately from the rest of the period's proto-science fiction.

Experimental science is at the heart of "A Dream". In the story it is represented by the advanced microscopes and telescopes of the Paris National Institute of Physics in 1899. Hartman sees these improved future instruments bringing to light new discoveries about nature.

Hartman's intuition is on target, since even today microscopes and "telescopes" functioning at different wavelengths bring information about the very large and the very small to light.

The story demonstrates that Hartman was familiar with contemporary natural science. "A Dream" mentions the German physicist Georg Lichtenberg (1742–1799) and his idea that all of nature is alive, and the British astronomer William Herschel (1738–1822) whose massive mirror telescopes represented the most advanced technology of their time.

The story clearly illustrates Hartman's insight into the huge potential for change inherent in the advancement science, a viewpoint that in his utopian texts is overshadowed by more general contemplation on the development of individuals and societies.

A central element in "A Dream" is the idea of nature as infinite, with the very large and the very small as parts of the same unbounded continuum. The conclusion he draws is that life is everywhere and that the cosmos itself is a living being, that we are all tiny parts of it and carry within ourselves countless smaller worlds.

Similar thoughts had been advanced before by many mystics. According to Hartman, his ideas were sparked by a scientific lecture presenting the latest discoveries made with the aid of microscopes and telescopes. What Hartman heard made him contemplate on how little we knew about the microscopic and the macroscopic parts of nature. The same lecture engendered the references to Lichtenberg and Herschel.

"A Dream" has a more general significance in the history of science fiction literature. As far as I'm aware, it is the first work dealing with the microcosm. Usually the American author Fitz-James O'Brien's (c. 1828–1862) story "The Diamond Lens" from 1858 is considered to be the first science fiction story about the microcosm. As with Hartman, the story has a microscopic world observed through a supermicroscope with a diamond lens.

"A Dream" is an exceptionally significant work in the history of Finnish science fiction literature, not just as the first representative of its genre in this country but also thanks to the independent and visionary thought it embodies. "A Dream" proudly stands alongside the rest of the proto-science fiction literature of its day, which earns it an honoured place in Finnish science fiction literature.

A DREAM

It was the year 1899. I was in Paris. I had a reason to visit the Institut National, where the fellows of the Physics department were busy making discoveries using microscopes. I was received with kindness and my hosts seemed to enjoy satisfying my curiosity, which had found an infinite number of targets. Being at a loss as what to ask to be instructed in, I simply begged to see what they were doing at the moment.

I was shown microscopes made from clear diamonds cut to be convex, which enlarged objects to a wondrous degree. By combining several such glasses of clearest diamond and thereto added reflecting mirrors, they had accomplished the most perfect microscopes.

Through one of the largest ones I could watch a drop of blood. The small creatures in the blood, who had previously by virtue of their movement been regarded as living animals, now appeared large as ostrich eggs, but were shaped as flat elongated trays and seemed composed by rings, as if they were made from an unordered, loosely rolled-up steel wire. At a closer inspection a stone could be seen at the centre of these trays, that illuminated the inner surface of the rings, while the outer rings were steel grey.

When the fellows became aware of my wonder and amazement at this, one of them told me that "if it now were possible to show you the phenomena, that we have observed using other instruments, you would get a clearer picture of what you just have seen; but at present I must be content to tell you that the rings you observe there are not continuous. Each one of them consists solely of a small and round body, that moves so incredibly fast around its centre, that it always appears as a continuous ring. From these fast motions inside the general fluid of the blood an electric force was awakened, which focused in the centre point of all rings to create a bright sheen. The thus created shining spot is to be considered as a sun in a planetary system, and the encircling bodies in a ring are planets, which compared to our celestial bodies are as infinitely fast as they are infinitely small."

As he uttered these words, my mind was led astray and I dozed off. I was one of the small bodies that moved together with a multitude of similar bodies in circles. A natural instinct made us wander towards our mutual shining centre as we strove to approach each other. But other, unknown, forces kept each one of us in our separate orbit. As we alternated between moving closer to enjoy each other's company and being pulled apart, we changed in many ways in shape: some of us disappeared while others arrived instead, without us being able to discern how these changes came to occur. This, however, did not worry us overly much, content to simply exist in our current state, as long as we were allowed to exist.

The time to disappear came for me. Now I became an infinitely smaller being, inhabiting one of these round bodies. Now my abode was enormously large and the space, in which it moved, was an infinity. Being newborn to the world I began to gather an understanding of the things around me, helped by the cares of my parents and the surrounding elder equals. The body on which I now lived, consisted like our earthly globe of sands and seas: among the thousands of animals who inhabited it, I and my equals held ourselves to be set apart in sensibility and a higher destination. Our shape was not like that of Man: I cannot now recall what we looked like but our needs and habits were fairly well aligned with those of Men. We ruled all other animals, we tilled the land; sowed and harvested its fruits, we sought treasures underneath its surface, traded with each other, fought and warred often, and spilled the blood of millions of our equals, usually for no valid reason. The sciences flourished in most places. There were academies, schools, monasteries, churches and learned societies everywhere. Having received a purposeful education I, by nature gifted with good discernment, came to be respected in the scholarly world. I lived to the age of 120 years, saw my great grandchildren, and passed away in the fullness of years, surrounded by a multitude of descendants.

Now I woke from my deep sleep and marvelled that this, my slow pilgrimage, had not lasted longer than an instant. The sound of the speaker's last words, infinitely small, had not yet left my ear, and none of the men present noticed any change in me. Happy that I had not missed anything of what had been presented to me, I now related what had happened to me.

My educator replied: "Your sleep was perfectly pertinent. Now you have taken a huge step towards better understanding what I will continue to relate." I listened closely and he continued:

"Tomorrow I hope to be able to show clearly the truth in everything I have told you. Our telescopes have been improved to the same degree as our microscopes. Ever since the days of Herschell they have been worked on to make them more perfect. What was only guessed at one-hundred years ago, has now been completely confirmed. You shall now be shown that not just every visible fixed star is a separate solar system, but also that the entire milky way in the sky consists of innumerable such systems. You will see every star therein surrounded by its planets and their companions. But even more: your sight shall be stretched further in the immeasurable universe, and you shall see that all systems contextually are completely identical to what you saw through the microscope in the drop of blood. You shall, as we have, be brought to the thought that everything in the universe that we directly or indirectly can comprehend with any of our senses, taken as a whole comprises only a minute part of a bodily fluid belonging to a continuous living being, an enormously huge animal. This animal is to us just as we are to the infinitely tiny creatures, in whose abode your spirit recently dwelt. Hence you shall acquire a new idea of infinitely huge and infinitely tiny objects that henceforth have almost escaped general thought, because our senses are not suited to observing them directly. No limit has been placed on Nature.

It is a terrible, but also by now highly probable, thought that there are not one but millions such, for our senses far too large, animals and that all of these inhabit a body that I might call an earth or a planet, and who most likely have millions of equals. It would be folly to claim that there is no room for such creatures in Nature. One would simply be looking for whatever obstacles one would imagine at work against the further expansions of the world. We shall surely find none.

Even so we must on the other hand believe that however small the worlds in the bodily fluids of the animals may seem to us, and however much smaller their inhabitants are, in their fluids there are still new worlds and new inhabitants, whose tiny size is to an even higher degree infinite, and that there cannot be a lower limit to decreasing size.

Lichtenberg's opinion that everything in Nature lives, and there is nothing dead except in the imagination of Man, used to be considered bold, yes, even by some, criminal. No-one doubts the truth of that any longer. You will soon see phenomena that prove, that our earth and the planets are living creatures who are self-conscious and know of each other. What you experienced asleep in a small world, you can easily imagine occur also in a larger one, and in the body parts of all living creatures. But I must stop here, the time has come for the society to part, welcome back tomorrow!"

At this point everyone went their own way, and I woke from my dream.

THE CALL OF THE GROKE

PHILOSOPHY WITH THE MOOMINS

A figure resembling Moomintroll first appeared on the wall of the outhouse at the summer place in Pellinki. The big-nosed, sullen-looking creature depicted Immanuel Kant, known for his theory of duty-based ethics. Under the image, Tove Jansson had scribbled her protest: “Freedom is the best thing.”

Jansson was an individualist who set great store by freedom. This approach was close to existentialism, the school of philosophy fashionable at the time. There were many other similar trends, such as C. G. Jung’s analytical psychology, which discussed matters using symbols, like Jansson herself did.

There is no reason to believe that Tove Jansson would have been ignorant of the ideological discussions of her time or that these discussions would not have affected her work. “I’ve read my Sartre,” she has been known to comment in interviews. The short story “The Spring Tune” seems like a very conscious tip of the hat to Sartre, as the conversations taking place in the story are very similar to those presented in Nausea. However, these relationships of influence are not the most interesting substance of the Moomin books, or existentialism itself, for that matter. What is interesting is that the way they are formulated reveals something important about being human, and does it in a manner that challenges and speaks to the individual. The best features of Sartrean existentialism are echoes of Husserl’s phenomenology: the reasoning is based on experience and observation. The same applies to Tove Jansson’s work: even though the Moomins live in a fantasy world surrounded by peculiar creatures and are thus clearly the product of the author’s imagination, they are nevertheless based on accurate and recognizable, often painful observations of what it means to be human. The Moomins are a fairy tale, but a fairy tale shot through with reality.

Freedom is a recurring theme in all Moomin books. The longing for freedom takes various forms in different characters. It is easiest to see in Snufkin, who does not want to – or isn’t even able to – bind himself either to a place or to Moomintroll, who loves him. In the above-mentioned short story “The Spring Tune,” he is clearly tormented by the ties of friendship. Snufkin also carries on a constant battle against prohibitory signs, park keepers, and other restrictive institutions.

In Moominpappa, the desire for freedom is manifested as a continuous longing to flee the burden of quotidian life. He has a comfortable position as the father of the family, but this role does not satisfy him. In The Exploits of Moominpappa, he is shown toying with the idea of escape:

“I’m sure I’d manage an escape still if I needed to,” Moominpappa thought. “Who cares if I’m not as young as I used to be!”

He chuckled to himself. Then he lowered his slightly rheumatic legs over the window ledge and reached for the rope ladder.

It swung about and he had great difficulty in keeping his balance.

“Drat the thing,” said Moominpappa softly, beginning to feel giddy.[1]

The idea is not realized this time. Moominpappa is taken by surprise by his son and is too embarrassed to even tell Moomintroll what was on his mind. Much later, in the short story "The Secret of the Hattifatteners," Moominpappa finally carries out his plan, leaves the family that he feels is a millstone around his neck, and runs off with the hattifatteners.

In the story "The Hemulen who Loved Silence," we meet a hemulen who punches holes in pleasure-ground tickets because he believes it is expected of him and dreams of retirement, when he could finally do what he really wants to. By the end of the story, he learns to say "no" to the demands set upon him by relatives and other creatures.

Moominvalley in November presents us with another hemulen, who has spent his time organizing things for other people and has never realized his dream of sailing.

These examples deal with freedom. Freedom is all about choice. It's about being able to make decisions that change us and the world we live in. It's about being able to imagine another reality depending on the choices we make.

The story of the hemulen who loved silence emphasizes the Sartrean idea, originally formulated by Hegel, that freedom is specifically the freedom to say no. It is the freedom to refuse.

We live in a given reality that offers us suggestions and demands: you are like this. Or: you must be like that. Or: the world is like this. We have certain roles and duties in life. If we want something else instead – to escape, to travel with the hattifatteners, to learn how to sail, to build a doll's house – we must refuse the reality that already exists – being the father of a family, organizing things for other people, or punching holes in tickets. We must say no to what we are so that we can choose something else.

This choice makes us scared or anxious, as that other reality does not exist yet. At the moment of choice, we are faced with something nonexistent. Nothing. Our anxiety is a kind of terror in the face of this emptiness, or totality, or our own options. It is terror in the face of the fact that what we have now, the present, will inevitably disappear and be replaced by that which does not yet exist.

This vertigo is felt as dizziness and nausea, both in Sartre's novel Nausea and in Moominvalley. The rope ladder swings about and Moominpappa feels giddy. The hemulen feels sick at the thought of sailing, and even sicker when he finally gets the chance – or is forced – to hold the rudder. And Fillyjonk, who has ended up balancing on the roof of her house in Moominvalley in November, fears her own movements and also tends to have bouts of dizziness.

The swinging rope ladder is a good metaphor for the starting point from which we have to make our choices.

The ladder is shaky under our feet. We don't know the consequences of our actions. Time and time again, we run across situations like those in the King's garden party, where signs proclaim: DIDN'T THINK SO – DID YOU? When we make our choices, we are in the dark regarding their consequences, but at the same time, we are held responsible for them. We are also transient creatures: we can't have everything, but instead, as mentioned earlier, we have to reject some options. Choice is a terrible thing.

Those who have read their Moomin books will remember the scene in Moominsummer Madness where the Snork Maiden, looking for a dress, ends up in the theatre's costume storeroom. At first she nearly bursts with happiness. Later, she describes her experience, as quoted below in part:

“I've been looking for a dress. And I found several hundred and was so happy. Perhaps a thousand! And I looked and looked and tried on one after the other and felt sadder and sadder. Yes, what d'you think. They were far too many, don't you see. I couldn't ever have had them all or even choose the prettiest. They nearly made me afraid! So in the end I just ran away from them all.” [2]

The Snork Maiden could not decide, but running away was a decision, too. As Sartre and Camus have stated – I don't know which of them said it first – even declining to choose is a choice. We are forced to choose ourselves. Constantly. In a world that offers no external basis for our choices, even though it provides the framework for them. We cannot depend on anyone else, or we can, but even deciding to do this is a choice we must make alone.

We have exactly one life and we ourselves must be responsible for living it, at least within the limits within which we have opportunities to choose. Am I really trying to live my dream, or am I resigning myself to something else? Every moment, I define myself. Alone. Until I die.

For most of our lives we are able to silence the "terrible questions," as Dostoevsky called them. The questions about the meaning of life, about what I am and what I could be. About the fact that I, a nobody who has become real in time and is due to disappear into the past, must alone determine my worth. About death. But on occasion, something shakes us awake. A borderline situation: the death of a loved one, illness, divorce, falling in love, some other important choice. And again we find ourselves facing emptiness.

Facing the Groke.

The Groke appears in the Moomin books in several different roles that are not especially harmonized.

The Groke makes her first appearance in The Exploits of Moominpappa. The book mentions her howling hunting call, and she is depicted as a predator who eats her prey.

In Finn Family Moomintroll, on the other hand, the Groke is a creature from whom Thingummy and Bob have stolen the King's Ruby, and who is led by the jewel to Moominvalley to claim back her property. In this book, the Groke seems to be unfamiliar to the Moomins, who do not know what she looks like or how big she is. When the Groke is seen in a scene that follows the traditions of horror literature, she is described thus: "She was not particularly big and didn't look dangerous either, but you felt that she was terribly evil and would wait for ever. And that was awful."^[3] After the Groke leaves, the place where she sat is frozen. When the Groke appears at the Kafkaesque show trial organized by the Moomin family, they also hear her speak – in an icy voice, for the only time in the entire Moomin series.

Maybe losing the glow of the ruby makes the Groke what she is described as in Moominland Midwinter: eternally pursuing light and warmth, a Sisyphean tragic soul forced to begin her search ever anew, as whenever she reaches a fire, her touch makes it go out. The malevolence and evil seen in her thus far are gone. Rather, she is an object of pity. In the words of Too-ticky: "Take it easy. She didn't come to extinguish the fire, you see, she came to warm herself, poor creature. But everything that's warm goes cold when she sits down on it. Now she's disappointed once more."^[4]

Perhaps the slight disharmony in these depictions is felt only because we are gradually getting to know the Groke. All of her appearances, except maybe the very first one, have symbolic significance. It is obvious that the Groke is not just some scary creature from the outside, but a representative of something else. In the following, I don't focus on the scenes mentioned above, but the last, greatest, and most impressive scene, the one that allows us to get closest to the Groke. In Moominpappa at Sea, the Groke is more of an inner challenge.

The Moomin family holds freedom in high regard. That is right and proper: freedom is at the core of humanity. At the same time as these creatures cherish their own freedom and that of others, they do not want to bind themselves or others, they cherish independence. But the flip side of independence is needlessness. Creatures that are independent of each other also have no need for each other.

Moominpappa wakes up to his own needlessness one autumn day when he is not needed to put out forest fires, nor for housework, nor to say when to light the oil lamp to signal the end of summer. Not being needed is freedom, it means nobody demands anything of you. But demands are what makes you necessary. When you are needed, your life has significance. That which is insignificant is, in a certain sense, completely nonexistent. Nothing. The oil lamp burning on the veranda creates a circle of light around that which is common, shared, and meaningful:

“The lamp sizzled as it burned. It made everything seem close and safe, a little family circle they all knew and trusted. Outside this circle lay everything that was strange and frightening, and the darkness seemed to reach higher and higher and further and further away, right to the end of the world.”^[5]

Even though Moominpappa finds himself physically on the lit veranda, mentally he feels like an outsider in his needlessness. The Groke, who is attracted by the lamp-light to the window, is Moominpappa's loneliness and insignificance. She is Moominpappa's Groke.

The thought of the lighthouse island and a situation in which his family would need his protection allows Moominpappa to forget his problems for a while. But you can never run away from the terrible questions for good. The Groke knows that she could see the light again, and she would follow it again. And the Groke has time.

Moominpappa's attempt at solving his problem also rings untrue: he is subjecting his family to his own needs instead of answering his family's needs. The Groke will find them soon enough.

On the island, Moominpappa's son Moomintroll falls in love with a beautiful, nimble sea-horse. When he sees the sea-horses for the first time, they make him feel beautiful too. They act coquettishly and gallop away, and Moomintroll tries to lure them back with a lantern. Instead, he gets the Groke. Also in this case, the Groke is not an outsider. She is the pain of loving; in essence, she reflects the same longing for closeness from which Moominpappa is suffering. She is inseparably linked to Moomintroll's love.

“You're the most beautiful thing I've ever seen', Moomintroll went on, and just then the Groke began to howl.”[6]

The stronger Moomintroll's love grows, the closer the Groke comes and the lonelier Moomintroll feels. The sea-horses make fun of him and play with his feelings. In the end, Moomintroll's love seems to be a game of the imagination, a dream that is not based on reality. Anyone could substitute for the sea-horse; after all, Moomintroll cannot even tell the different sea-horses apart. What he obviously loves about the sea-horse is her independence, her indifference, and her light-hearted carelessness – all qualities not characteristic of his love. A different life, another life, unrealized opportunities.

That which is missing: nothing.

But we can learn to live with the Groke, with loneliness, with our cosmic insignificance. In the end, the Groke is not dangerous, and if we accept her, she might even warm up. Perhaps anguished passion itself and living a life defined by it are more important than the object of that passion.

SCIENCE FICTION AND ROBOTS SURVEY

<https://tinyurl.com/SciFiRobots>

Also: Have you ever wanted to write a short SF story? Do you have an awesome idea, but one that still exists only as a synopsis in your head? Even if it's just an outline or question? If it's in some way related to artificial intelligences and contains an ethical problem (what doesn't?), now is your chance: We're looking for new moral dilemmas to be used in future research. The best, most interesting and original dilemmas will be chosen by the scientific board and three (or more, if the funding goes through) will be turned into a comic by Ninni Aalto (Hugo nominee for Best Fan Artist 2016 and 2017). You get the original, we retain the right to use the comics in our research.

Please take this survey, although it may take 45 minutes of your time. Think of the robots! This will make them so happy!

Following the official research ethics guidelines (The Declaration of Helsinki, 1964), I have to warn you that the survey is not suitable for minors and those easily distressed. As this is a web based survey, there will be no invasive methods used, psychoactive chemicals applied or physiological data collected. You may opt out at any time you want. All data will be completely anonymized, except where absolutely necessary for identifying the winners.

The study is done by Mika Koverola (mika.koverola@gmail.com) as a part of his PhD studies in cognitive science / moral psychology / roboethics. The study is formally supervised by Dr. Michael Laakasuo of the Moralities of Intelligent Machines (moim.fi) research group at the University of Helsinki. This study has no commercial interests.

I'll be at the bar at WorldCon every night at 22.00 with a robot if you want to know more or just generally talk about bots and ethics.

THE PREHISTORY OF FINNISH WEIRD

The term “Finnish Weird” was invented by Worldcon 75 Guest of Honor Johanna Sinisalo in 2010. Of course, weird Finnish fiction has been around for a long time. Here are 15 fantastic, significant, and often very strange examples of Finnish speculative fiction from the 20th century.

Aili Somersalo: Mestaritontun seikkailut (1919)
[“The Adventures of Master Gnome”]

Aili Somersalo (1887–1957) was an author from Tampere who wrote fairy tales, children’s books, and historical novels. Mestaritontun seikkailut is a free-standing sequel to her earlier book Päivikin satu (1918) [“Päivikki’s Tale”].

Master Gnome, who has guarded the royal castle of Fairyland for hundreds of years, is reprimanded by the king for doing his work poorly. He takes offence and leaves the castle to go wandering. He hears about a princess who is trapped in stone and arranges a rescue operation. The world of the story combines Finnish nature and folk tradition with classic fairy tale and fantasy elements.

Mestaritontun seikkailut is an early classic of Finnish fantasy. In 2004, it was voted as the all-time favorite Finnish fairy tale by readers of Helsingin Sanomat, the biggest newspaper in Finland.

Aino Kallas: Sudenmorsian (1928)

English translation: Wolf’s Bride (UK 1930; Otava, Helsinki: 1975)

This werewolf story is set on the Estonian island of Hiidenmaa in the 17th century. Aalo, the wife of a forest ranger, turns into a werewolf at night. Kallas was familiar with Estonian folk beliefs regarding werewolves and based her book on them. The novel is about a werewolf, but also about a woman’s role in society. At night, Aalo lets her dark side loose and runs in the woods as a wolf. In the forest, she can experience the freedom and ecstasy that she lacks in her life as a wife and mother. But freedom comes at a price in the 17th-century world, where witchcraft is punishable by death. The book is written in an old-fashioned style and resembles a ballad.

Aino Kallas (1878–1956) began her writing career as a poet in her twenties. In 1900, she married the Estonian researcher and diplomat Oskar Kallas and moved to Estonia. She lived for years in Estonia, London, and after the war in Sweden, and returned to Finland after the death of her husband. Kallas is also considered an Estonian author.

L. Valakivi: The Tarsa series (1940–41)

During World War II, Finland suffered from shortages of all kinds of goods, which led to the development of substitute products. Apparently, early 1940s Finland also suffered from a shortage of Tarzan books by Edgar Rice Burroughs, resulting in the creation of Tarsa, a man raised by bears. Tarsa lived in the forest and fought against the Russians in the Winter War, which was depicted in as politically incorrect a manner as might be expected from a book written during the war years. The series takes a proper turn towards the fantastic in the last book, Tarsa ja pakoluolan salaisuus (1941) ["Tarsa and the Secret of the Escape Cave"], in which Tarsa discovers the underground kingdom of the Sámi.

L. Valakivi, whose original name was Lahja Aalto (1892–1956), is also remembered as the author of an original science fiction novel, Nuortuva maailma (1931) ["The Rejuvenating World"].

Mika Waltari: Turms Kuolematon (1955)

English translation: The Etruscan (US 1956, UK 1957)

The Etruscan is the most mystical of Mika Waltari's historical novels and clearly edges into the territory of fantasy literature. The novel is set in ancient Italy, during the time of the mysterious Etruscans, in about the 6th century BCE.

The main character, Turms, has lost his memory in his youth as the result of a lightning strike: he knows nothing of his origins. Turms seeks his destiny and is involved in various adventures around the Mediterranean during his journey. The style of the novel is leisurely; some readers find it too slow, others enjoy it precisely for this reason. Turms finds out that he is lukumo, immortal.

Mika Waltari (1908–1979) was one of the most popular Finnish writers ever, and he was also fairly well known abroad. His major work, Sinuhe, egyptiläinen (1945) [The Egyptian, 1949], was even made into a Hollywood movie. Waltari's historical novels are philosophical stories about being human, but also include adventure and humor.

Osmo Ilmari: Planeetta Logos (1959)

["A Planet Named Logos"]

In many ways, Planeetta Logos bears a great resemblance to the science fiction novels of the golden age. Finnish-born spaceship captain Martti Jyry is shipwrecked on a strange planet. He gets to know the inhabitants of the planet, whose society is built on inequality. The black people keep the yellow people as their slaves. The entire planet is governed by a mysterious computer, the Wisdom of Logos, which controls people by means of headbands. Jyry foments a rebellion resulting in the destruction of the Wisdom of Logos, and the society of the planet becomes more equal.

Osmo Ilmari, whose real name was Osmo Ilmari Lampinen (1927–1999), was a journalist by trade. He wrote four young adult science fiction novels between 1956 and 1959. In his retirement, he also published science fiction short stories in the Portti magazine. Of his YA novels, Planeetta Logos is the most readable for adult readers.

Veikko Huovinen: Talvituristi (1965)

["The Winter Tourist"]

Talvituristi contains two wintry tales. The first, "Valmismatka" ["The Package Tour"], tells of a caravan of cars carrying tourists that drives through bitterly cold, wintry Finland from south to north, all the way to Norway and the shore of the Arctic Ocean. The travelers join the caravan in the middle of their everyday activities.

Some leave their work in the middle of the day, others leave everything dramatically behind, such as the farmer who casts his family out into the night and burns his house down. The story is intensive, strange, and symbolic. Veikko Huovinen (1927–2009) was one of the best-loved humorous writers in Finland. His "short specials”, short stories, often skirt the boundaries of fantasy. Huovinen’s works also include the novel Puukansan tarina (1984) [Tale of the forest folk, Helsinki: Otava 1994], probably the only novel in the history of literature featuring a forest as protagonist.

Irmelin Sandman Lilius: The Tulavall series (1967–)

Born in Helsinki in 1936, Irmelin Sandman Lilius is one of the most acclaimed Swedish-language writers in Finland. She has said she doesn’t really consider herself a children’s writer. “But children like my books”.

Her best known works form the Tulavall series, which began in 1967 with “Bonadea”. Tulavall is a fictional small town on the southern coast of Finland, a parallel universe where the borderline between the reality of late-19th-century life and fantasy is ever shifting.

Sandman Lilius has had her works translated into 16 languages. She won several awards, among them the Astrid Lindgren and Tove Jansson prizes for children’s literature.

Arto Paasilinna: Jäniksen vuosi (1975)

English translation: The Year of the Hare (UK 1995)

The Year of the Hare combines the Finnish relationship with nature and a typical theme of the 1970s, escape from the busy and stressful city life. The main character, a journalist named Vatanen, is driving back from a job when he runs over a young hare. Vatanen goes into the woods to see what happened to the hare – and never comes back. He leaves his former life behind and takes up work at various logging and building sites together with his hare. The exaggerating style of the novel takes a turn towards the fantastic near the end. The Year of the Hare is also notable for quite possibly the most magnificent description of a hangover in Finnish literature. This is a significant achievement, as the subject is not uncommon in Finnish books.

Arto Paasilinna (b. 1942) is one of the most successful Finnish authors, both in Finland and abroad. In Finland, Paasilinna is considered as a humorist whose latest book used to be a traditional Father’s Day or Christmas present. Outside his native country, Paasilinna is appreciated as a philosophical writer. His work contains clear fantasy and science fiction themes that have been ignored by Finnish reviewers.

Juhani Peltonen: Elmo (1978)

When Elmo was a child, it was foretold that he was destined for greatness. And he becomes great indeed: the best athlete in the world, who breaks the world record in the 100-meter sprint even though he stumbles and falls midway. During the 50-kilometer ski race, he has time to take a nap. Juhani Peltonen’s novel is a parody and satire of sports fanaticism, but also much more. Sports are of minor importance to Elmo. He is a lonely man yearning for love, interested mainly in apple cultivation and Orthodox church architecture.

Juhani Peltonen (1941–98) was a versatile author known for playing with language, a virtuoso of style. Many of his books can be classified as fantasy.

Jukka Pakkanen: Auruksen tapaus (1980)

[“The Case of Aurus”]

How about a dystopia in which the oppressive society exists equally much in people’s consciousnesses as in the corridors of an office filled with bureaucrats? Something like this is the case in Jukka Pakkanen’s science fiction novel Auruksen tapaus. The novel’s protagonist, a clerk named Mitro Tell, has a job categorizing consciousnesses. The Society gives him the task of finding out what has happened to the recording of the consciousness of Aurus, a famous water scientist. This brings Tell in contact with Elena, the widow of Aurus. Together they decide to defy the Society.

Before his writing career, author Jukka Pakkanen (b. 1942) worked as a science and arts journalist. His works include several books that can be considered as speculative fiction. He is also specifically interested in bicycle racing, football, and Italy.

Aila Meriluoto: Vihreä tukka (1982)

[“Green Hair”]

Aila Meriluoto’s lyrical, multi-layered fairy tale Vihreä tukka speaks up for nature and the imagination. It is the story of a girl named Eintel who lives with her grandparents. She has a secret: her hair is green. She has to dye it because green hair is not considered suitable in a world where gnomes and pixies are not popular. Eintel meets a green-haired pixie boy and learns new things about herself.

Aila Meriluoto (b. 1924) is known above all as a poet. Her works also include biographies, novels, and books for children and young adults.

Leena Krohn: Tainaron (1985)

English translation: Tainaron (US: 2004, 2015)

Leena Krohn made her literary breakthrough with Tainaron. This mystical and eccentric novel consists of letters written from the city of Tainaron by a person who remains unknown. The letter writer describes the city and its denizens, who are insects of some sort. The city of Tainaron does not seem to be situated within the realm of geography or of history. The book is poetic, philosophical, and strange beyond dispute.

Leena Krohn (b. 1947) is known for her books that view the modern world from a unique philosophical and fantastic standpoint.

Translations: BG, EN, ET, ES, HU, JA, LV, NL, PL, SV

Kimmo Saneri: Avaruussirkus (1988)

[“The Space Circus”]

Kimmo Saneri (b. 1958) gained renown in the 1980s with his original, poetic science fiction short stories. His two short story collections, Avaruussirkus and Valon takana (1992) [“Beyond the Light”] are lyrical, open to various interpretations, and filled with weirdness. His stories jump between the human mind and strange worlds; they are easier to read as poetic images of some kind than traditional stories with a plot. The stories in Avaruussirkus are slightly more traditional in their format than his later stories.

Saneri began his literary career as a poet. He published two poetry collections before his short story collections.

Maarit Verronen: Pimeästä maasta (1995)

[“From the Dark Land”]

Pimeästä maasta is Verronen's second novel, and most probably the strangest of all her books. Ulthyra Tharabereghist comes from the Dark Land, far in the northern tundra. In her native land, it is very important to fit a certain mold, to have a certain shape. For all her life, Ulthyra has felt like she is the wrong shape. She leaves her home to find other ways of living. The characters in the book are not exactly human and the setting is not specifically recognizable. The themes of the book, however, are familiar from Verronen's other works: individuals who feel like outsiders in society and distant, deserted environments.

Maarit Verronen (b. 1965) originally studied astronomy. Her works include many books that can be classified as science fiction and fantasy. In the 21st century, she has written dystopian books in particular.

Juha K. Tapio: Frankensteinin muistikirja (1996)

[“Frankenstein's Notebook”]

What happened to Victor Frankenstein's monster after the end of Mary Shelley's book Frankenstein? This is revealed in Juha K. Tapio's (b. 1957) first book Frankensteinin muistikirja. The monster, Frank M. Stein – or is he really a monster after all? – lives a long and colorful life. He travels around Europe with the Roma, runs a funeral business in Leipzig, and chases a golem in Prague. In the present day of the story, Stein meets Ernest Hemingway and Gertrude Stein in Paris and wants to meet Picasso. Tapio's novel is a review of European literature and the history of philosophy from the last 300 years.

Examples of 21st-century Finnish Weird are available in the free Finnish Weird magazine (www.finnishweird.net) and the Giants at the End of the World anthology published by Worldcon 75.

Tears were running down my cheeks. Tears of happiness. I had just found out that Helsinki would be organising the Worldcon in 2017. Apparently we got it right, even in the beginning, I said to myself in an undertone.

In 1987, I was persuaded to take part in a course in directing creative writing. In the post-sauna party in Mikkeli, we got to talking about what kinds of books each of us would recommend for young readers. “Definitely science fiction and fantasy,” I replied. Both genres stimulated the imagination. I confessed I was fond of both, as a counterweight to the realism favoured by Finnish novelists at the time. The next morning one of the participants came up to me and asked: “Did you know there’s a Finnish Science Fiction Writers’ Association?” I was handed a slip of paper torn from a notebook, with the Suomen tietekirjoittajat written on it along with the name Pekka Supinen and a phone number.

After the course, it took a couple of weeks for me to call the number. In the course of the very, very long conversation that ensued, Pekka welcomed me to Kantakrouvi in Ruoholahti, Helsinki, to the fandom meet-up that took place there every other Thursday.

I can’t remember what I thought about or expected to find when I stepped into Kantis for the first time. I do remember the slight panic that struck me when I got to the corner of the pub where the fans were sitting. A whole horde of men and only one woman, Anetta Pirinen, who was just about to get up and leave. We barely got to know each other and exchange a few words. And then there I was, surrounded by men. I was surprised and gratified by the absence of that dismissive attitude towards my gender that was then still typical in working life. Those assembled that day were still buoyed up by the recent Worldcon in Brighton. Photos were passed around. I sat next to Juhani Hinkkanen and he pointed out people to me and talked about all the things that had happened at Brighton. I was told about the power ladies in Tampere, Johanna Sinisalo, Leena Peltonen, Eija Elo, and Liisa Rantalaiho. I revelled in all the discussions that night. We agreed that we had to get publishers to invest in translating more science fiction novels. Very quickly I was drawn into the activities of the Finnish Science Fiction Writers’ Association. I began to write book reviews and articles on creative writing. I even turned my hand to writing a few short stories. Soon after this the Helsinki University Science Fiction Club was founded, which brought more young women to our fandom meetups.

I got to know the folks from Tampere when they started to organise their own meetups. They met at a place called Kanttarelli (chanterelle) downstairs from Johanna Sinisalo's flat. There were fewer than ten women active in the fandom, and we were easily able to fit in Sinisalo's living room where Johanna and Leena Peltonen invited us on Philomena Fogg's Culinary Journey Around the World in Eight Hours. The menu consisted of the ethnic dishes of the journey, and after each visit, the participants received a small souvenir. I still have one of mine, a little pocket mirror from Yokohama.

In the late 1980s, the Finnish fandom was very active in seeking experience at organising international events. We took part in the Eurocon at Budapest in 1988. In 1989, we travelled to Jersey for Eastercon. In the 90s the regulars took part in the Hague Worldcon, the Glasgow Eastercon in 1991, and the Jersey Helicon in 1993.

At these events we met authors who we could invite as Guests of Honour at our own fandom events. 1989 saw the beginning of the regular Finnish fan convention, Eeva-Liisa with KusKus. Viikinsaari, late 80s.

Finnccon, where entry was and remains free. At the time they took place at the Old Student House, a venue smack in the middle of central Helsinki, and anyone passing could come in and see what it was all about. In my opinion it was Finnccon and its wonderful Guests of Honour, such as John Brunner, Iain M. Banks, Terry Pratchett, Bruce Sterling, Norman Spinrad, Ian McDonald and Connie Willis, that acted as bait to bring new members into the science fiction societies and fandom whose membership increased exponentially in the 1990s. More and more SF/F literature was being translated and the works were more recent. The shelves in the Academic Bookstore filled with genre works and the number of Finnish genre authors increased. In addition, the 1990s fostered a new group of active fans who were able to take over when the previous generation began to retire.

For thirty years, since those first fandom meetups in Kanttis, we had a running joke: Let's organise a Worldcon in Finland! I can still hardly believe that it's finally come true.

JUHANI HINKKANEN

WHEN I WAS IN FANDOM...

I've been reading science fiction since childhood, and that was long ago. My first science fiction experiences came from the Donald Duck stories of Carl Barks in the late fifties, and I believe the first real science fiction book I read was a juvenile lost world story by the Finnish author Mauno Pelkonen called Missä on Paititin maa? [Where is the land of Paititi?], which I got as a birthday present in 1963. It was full of lost cities in the Amazon with dinosaurs roaming the unreachable lands beyond deep and inhospitable swamps, in other words everything required to turn a eight-year-old kid into a life-long consumer of trashy adventures with an insatiable thirst for more.

And so it started. I read everything I suspected might have some fantastic elements in it, and that literally means everything. It wasn't very difficult, as there wasn't that much SF or fantasy published in Finland in those days. My early favourites were the few authors who had more than one or two books available. In practice that meant Edgar Rice Burroughs and Jules Verne, and in the case of the former, it meant Tarzan. The Mars books were long out of print and unavailable even in libraries, even though there had been many editions from the 1920s to the early fifties. In the sixties, there wasn't much available in Finnish from established genre authors: some Bradbury, some juveniles, some Heinlein, some other authors (Wyndham, Walter Miller), but not even Clarke or Asimov until after Kubrick's 2001.

SF really started to establish itself in the 1970s when two big publishers began long-running SF series in hardcover. That was also the time when I became confident enough to start reading SF and fantasy in English after moving from the small town of Hämeenlinna to Helsinki, where foreign paperbacks were more easily available and libraries had a good selection of SF in English. Very soon, after finding and reading histories of SF by Sam J. Lundwall, Brian Aldiss, and others I also became aware of the existence of something called fandom. I soon located addresses in the UK and USA, joined the BSFA, and subscribed to Analog, Fantasy & Science Fiction, and the best sercon publications like Algol/Starship. Had I but known that there was in fact fandom in Finland, although mostly a local one in the town of Turku, I would have joined immediately, but it was not until the early 1980s that I even heard about them.

For me, the eighties were the golden age of Finnish fandom. The numbers of lone fans around Finland, but especially in bigger cities and towns, reached critical mass, and we loners realised that there were others like us. After Turku, the next SF society was founded in Tampere, and in Helsinki, the astronomical society Ursa called on interested people to start planning a serious magazine about SF to be called Aikakone. I went there, almost running all the way, and for the first time, I met many other early fans, including Jyrki Ijäs, Tom Ölander, and Jari Koponen. Jyrki and Tom, being over ten years older than me, had been reading and collecting science fiction seriously since the sixties, and Tom had a very large collection of fanzines from around the world, as well as also good contacts with fandom in Sweden. He, together with Sam Lundwall and others, organised the first sf con in Finland, the King Con, from 28 to 30 May, 1982. That was the real birth of Finnish fandom, for it was there that the many BNFs of the future met each other for the first time.

So I jumped in at the deep end and started doing things. I wrote articles about SF, was always there when something science fictional happened around Helsinki, published a few issues of my own zine, edited Kosmoskynä and later Aikakone, started selling SF & fantasy, was in committees of the first two Finncons (1986 & 1989), started, with Toni Jerrman, the regular bimonthly meetings of Helsinki fandom, did some editing for book publishers, took part in various foreign cons, photographed everything, and probably made a general nuisance of myself. I also frenetically collected SF and everything even slightly SF-related in Finnish and in English, and I still wonder how I found time to do everything that I messed with. I even wrote a few short stories and got them published in some smaller zines, but, probably wisely, decided that fiction writing wasn't really my cup of tea.

The nineties started, I moved to Tampere, and things for me got even more hectic. Around 1997, I felt that I had had enough. Somehow it wasn't fun any more. So I left active fandom with some regrets and good memories. But those eighties, they were great times. We in Helsinki felt that we were riding on the crest of the SF wave and everything seemed possible. We even joked about someday putting up a Worldcon. Well, I didn't really believe it would happen anytime soon, not for at least 30 years anyway...

POSTCARDS TO THE EDGE — MY ROAD TO HELSINKI FANDOM

TRANSLATED BY SARIANNA SILVONEN

Like many other young Finnish science fiction and fantasy fans in the 1980s, I thought I was a lonely freak – I wondered whether anyone else in the world liked this kind of literature, let alone felt as passionately about it as I did. The scarcity of SF/F books published in Finland at that time supported my theory of being one among the pathetically few. Perhaps only one or two translated books per year were published, and they consisted mainly of already slightly outdated classics by Asimov, Bradbury, or Clarke. Finnish science fiction or fantasy literature was practically non-existent, and it was easy to draw the conclusion that there was no demand for this kind of books. I therefore began to look for books in English, but even they were hard to come by in Finland back then.

My first step towards finding like-minded people was the branch shop of a large Helsinki-based bookstore that opened in my home town of Tampere. This shop offered copies of many small-circulation hobby magazines, and it was there I found the first Finnish SF semiprozines that I had ever seen. In the early 1980s, three such magazines were published: Spin, based in Turku, Aikakone [Time Machine], published by the Ursa Astronomical Association in Helsinki, and Portti [Gateway], which was edited in my hometown, Tampere. That hobby magazine shelf, which offered both Finnish science fiction and Finnish amateur comics, was a dream come true. Magazines about my two most beloved hobbies – and the best thing was that I could try to send something to these magazines, perhaps even have it accepted for publication! These magazines were the most important reason why I started to write and draw purposefully instead of just daydreaming. Another significant impact of the magazines was making me realize I was not alone: there was a big bunch of people in Finland who were interested in the same things.

One day in 1982, I gathered my courage and sent a short story to Portti magazine. In addition to publishing my story, the magazine also published my illustrations for it! (Both – especially the illustrations – are positively wretched by modern standards, but fortunately the publishing threshold for Finnish semiprozines has risen substantially since those early years.) This was naturally enormously motivating for me. But an even more important consequence was the phone call I got soon after that (that's right, a phone call – e-mail did not exist yet, let alone the Internet). The caller was Leena Peltonen, one of the editors of Portti, who suggested a meeting – the magazine was in constant need of book reviewers and article writers. Our meeting was very fruitful and led to a long, close friendship, as well as my becoming a regular contributor to Portti. (Much later, Ursa stopped publishing the Aikakone magazine and Leena and I started editing it together, but that's another story.)

At this point, my circle of SF enthusiast friends was limited mainly to Tampere. The next important step in my networking was taken when a new Helsinki-based semiprozine, Tähtivaeltaja [Star Rover], started in 1984. Tähtivaeltaja was a very different kind of magazine than the other three: from the start, it profiled itself as an anarchistic, punk- and rock-minded publication that also delved into phenomena in the margins of culture and often used very outspoken language. For example, it published detailed “binge reports”, amusing stories of the booze-fuelled adventures of the editor and his SF buddies. Tähtivaeltaja was a breath of fresh air in many ways. I greatly admired the way editor Toni Jerrman might write an entire movie review using only two words: “total bullshit”.

As I already mentioned, all this happened before the Internet. On a Friday night out partying, there was no fear of ending up on Facebook spewing imprudent comments that you might have cause to regret later. However, my partner Hannu – also a big fan of Tähtivaeltaja – and I invented a steam punkish equivalent: some night out drinking we chanced upon the idea of sending postcards to Toni Jerrman at Tähtivaeltaja. (Yes, you read it right. Sounds totally Jurassic.) We wrote a few silly lines on a card and took it to the letter box right away so we wouldn't get cold feet.

I was nearly bedazzled with happiness when Toni Jerrman once quoted one of our silly cards in the magazine's leading article. I was even more surprised when the phone rang one day and Toni was at the other end of the line. He was in Tampere, visiting his cartoonist friend, and invited himself over to visit me right away. I said yes, of course, but I remember being very nervous about the meeting. However, Toni turned out to be anything but scary, and after we met, it was perfectly clear that this would not be the last time. I also started contributing to Tähtivaeltaja, and it did not take long for me to be featured in binge reports as well.

In the aftermath of those postcards, my circle of SF friends expanded dramatically. Soon I started visiting Helsinki regularly and getting to know many notable people in the Helsinki SF community, who are still my closest friends. Friends from Helsinki also visited us at home, and after SF meetings in Tampere, we often had an after-party at our place, leading to an apartment full of wearily sleeping (or, to be honest, passed out) SF fans. Rumour has it that after a certain party that stretched out for a couple of days, the neighbourhood kids had invented a new game, “let's play drunks”, but I hope this is just malicious gossip.

Helsinki became my other spiritual home town (nowadays I even have a small pied-à-terre in Helsinki) and SF fandom – no matter where in Finland or the world the people come from – became a circle of life-long friends. These friends have provided not only an irreplaceable support network of peers throughout my entire writing career, but also plenty of opportunities to have fun.

Jyrki Ijäs and Johanna Sinisalo in Budapest 1988.

For me and countless others, the most important person in the early days of Finnish SF fandom was Tom Ölander (1945–2002). Tom had a huge collection of foreign SF zines and a lot of contacts with SF fans all over the world. He was even given two international awards for all the work he did for the global fandom.

My own first contact with the SF fandom was on the pages of a tabloid when it ran a small story on the Spin fanzine that the Turku Science Fiction Society had started a couple of years earlier (as hard as this might be to imagine, back in those days even tabloids had factual articles on occasion). This was towards the end of the 1970s and no one had even heard of the internet yet, so getting in touch with the people creating Spin was a bit of a bother. Luckily, the SF enthusiast Kaarle Ervasti had a used bookstore in Helsinki that also sold Spin magazines. Soon I ended up sending my poorly drawn images and even worse stories to Spin.

From 1980 to 1982 Ölander had a fanzine column in Spin where he introduced the different magazines with such enthusiasm that soon every second Finnish SF fan and their cousin were creating their own fanzines. At the same time, the magazines with a more professional touch were also created, such as Aikakone, Portti and Tähtivaeltaja. As you might guess, Tom had a hand in the early years of Aikakone.

Tom also presented fandom to Finns in many other ways. In 1982, he and the Swedish author Sam J. Lundwall arranged the Finnish-Swedish King-Con convention, which brought the international con culture to Finland and was the first time the Finnish fans from different parts of the country were brought together in a more significant way.

In 1985, Tom organized an excursion of Finnish fans to Stockholm to visit Swecon '85. On the return voyage Tom plied people with green SF drinks and then started talking them into the organizing the Finncon '86 convention that he'd come up with. Under the influence of the drinks I agreed to join the con committee – and I'm still on the same path to this day.

Finncon '86, which was held in the centre of Helsinki at the Vanha Ylioppilastalo (Old Student House), was a success as a convention, but the debts then created stayed with Tom for years. This didn't stop the man, however, and later he organized a booze-filled mini con trip to Stockholm (1987) and a memorable trip to Eurocon in Budapest (1988). Over the latter trip, the Finns made the acquaintance of John Brunner, who turned out to be such a wonderful fellow, that of course he had to come over to visit Finland, as well.

This was the start of the decision to organize Finncon '89. With this in mind, we created the Helsingin Yliopiston SF Klubi (Helsinki University SF Club), as then the space at Vanha Ylioppilastalo would be available to the con at no cost. This way, we could avoid the debts Tom had to live with, and could open the doors of the convention to all comers for free. And there were plenty of comers – the two thousand program books printed for the convention ran out the first day. Tom was the obvious Finnish guest of honour.

During these first years, the fandom enthusiasm was palpable. Fanzines came and went, people devoured literature and had fiery arguments over it, conventions of all sizes were being organized, and visits to London after books and movies were frequent. Alcohol was a large part of the scene, so it's no wonder that Iain M. Banks drank me literally under the table in Stockholm. The height of the crazy was the drunken competitions of who could hang the longest from the balcony of Johanna Sinisalo's sixth story apartment.

Apart from the Eurocon at Budapest, early legends of the Finnish fandom were also created in such conventions as Conspiracy '87, Confiction '90, Eastercon '93, and Aikacon '94. But they aren't suitable reading for children or sensitive people.

Also, the more literary minded Finncons have continued on and grown into juggernauts that regularly gather thousands of visitors.

And this year, the dream first expressed by none other than Tom Ölander in the 1980s has finally come true: Worldcon is coming to Finland!

Iain M. Banks behind Toni Jerrman, Finncon 1991.

WORLDCON, SOME DAY

The summer of 1987 was an exciting time for Helsinki. The first Finncon had been organized the previous year – by a small group and for a small public – but it provided the first opportunity ever for science fiction fans to find each other. Fandom was gradually born and fannish things discussed. Would Philip K. Dick love or hate the Blade Runner movie? Was Orwell's 1984 behind us or still coming up? Would the American space shuttle program lead to the conquest of space? Could the Soviet Mir station succeed where the American Skylab failed?

I moved to Helsinki in 1987 because it was here that I met people with whom I could discuss Life, the Universe, and Everything and know that we were talking about tea. We were in our twenties – innocent and angry – and we wanted to make our marks. Since we had no heroes, we decided to become heroes ourselves.

The cause for the most excitement was Conspiracy 1987, the first Worldcon in Europe in a decade. About a dozen Finnish fans were planning to travel to Brighton, but only a few knew what to expect.

The English-speaking science fiction community was buzzing. Many of the old masters were losing their glamor. The New Wave was subsiding, but changes were afoot right under the surface. Writers of the younger generation had a fresh new approach towards science fiction and foresaw the changing world. Cyberpunk was already dead, the Brighton con announced. The word was no longer spoken in panel discussions.

When we returned to Helsinki, many of us were thinking of the same thing. Could we organize a Worldcon in Helsinki someday? In our heads, the answer was “maybe”, but out loud, we cried, “Never! It's much too big!”

And yet we wanted to do something. Something that would be more suitable for Finland and Helsinki. We decided that the next Finncon would be bigger and more ambitious – we decided that entrance should be free and the con should be aimed at the general public.

In the 1980s, Finnish science fiction had probably hit its lowest point ever. Only a few publishers were publishing science fiction, and even then the books were mainly classics or crumbs from the work of the old masters. Even Neuromancer was published in Finnish as late as 1991. Almost nobody was writing Finnish science fiction – or they were writing it for themselves and publishing it only in fanzines that had been started for that very purpose. Finnish science fiction had no originality – nobody really knew what they wanted it to do or how it could differentiate itself from English-language science fiction, even in its own language area.

Toni Jerrman, Kimmo Lehtonen and Markku Uusitalo on their way to Conspiracy '87, the 45th World Science Fiction Convention held in Brighton, UK.

The guest of honor for the next Finncon in 1989 was John Brunner, the early forefather of proto-cyberpunk and post-colonial and post-industrialist science fiction. And in 1991, we hosted Iain M. Banks, who succeeded in crossing the chasm between ambitious science fiction and the literary mainstream, thus raising the literary crossbar a foot higher.

Maybe it was those very first guests of honor, Aldiss (1986), Brunner, and Banks, who set the stage for the future of Finnish science fiction and fandom. Finncons were a purposeful attempt to introduce the general public to the kind of science fiction literature that was more than just Star Wars, UFOs, or clumsy visions of the future. The kind of science fiction that was humane, socially aware, and comparable to any other literary genre; the kind that made you think, fear, and wonder.

The aims and policies of Finncon and Finnish fandom have remained the same up to today. In the past thirty years, a generation of fans has grown up in Finland for whom science fiction means all the things listed above. And most importantly, there is a new generation of science fiction writers who have found an original Finnish voice that can be recognized throughout the world.

And now, dear friends, we also have Worldcon! The dream that we did not dare speak out loud has become reality almost by accident. At least that's what it feels like. What else could result from thirty years of dreaming, millions of volunteer hours, and strong faith than a huge accident? Oops, we accidentally Worldcon.

MAJOR URSA HAT

The Major Ursa hat was inspired by the convention artwork, and features spaceships, star constellations and of course Major Ursa herself.

The hat can be made in two different versions. The stranded hat is suitable for the more advanced knitter. It has a slouchy look and fits a medium adult head. The easy stockinette hat with four sizes can be customized by using any of the motifs from the stranded hat chart, as well as sewing on a convention badge. It is recommended to use high contrast colourways.

INFORMATION

Sizes:

- Stranded hat: One size (medium adult)
- Stockinette hat: Child (small adult, medium adult) large adult

Needles: US 2 1/2 (3 mm), 16" (40 cm) circular needle, or size needed to obtain rib gauge, US 4 (3.5 mm), 16" (40 cm) circular needle and set of DPN's, or size needed to obtain stockinette gauge.

Notions: Tapestry needle. 1 stitch marker.

Optional: Pom pom maker.

- For the stranded hat: 10 additional stitch markers.
- For the stockinette hat: Sewing thread and needle for sewing on the badge.

Yarn: Novita Nordic Wool, 1.76 oz (50 g), 125 yards (115 m)

Stranded hat:

- 1 skein Novita Nordic Wool 170 Navy (MC)
- 1 skein Novita Nordic Wool 444 Grey (CC)

Stockinette hat:

- Child size: 1 skein Novita Nordic Wool 184 Petrol
- Other sizes: 2 skeins Novita Nordic Wool 184 Petrol

Gauge and measurements:

Gauge: 28 stitches and 28 rows per 4" (10cm) in rib pattern. 22 stitches and 28 rows per 4" (10cm) in stockinette pattern.

To fit head circumference: 20 inches/53 cm (21 inches/56 cm, 22 inches/58 cm) 23 inches/61 cm.

Length: 8 inches/20 cm (8,25 inches/21 cm, 8,75 inches/22 cm) 9 inches/23 cm

PATTERN NOTES

When reading the chart, remember that when working in the round you should read from right to left on every round.

It is important to be consistent in the orientation of the yarn when knitting stranded patterns. Here, the CC strand of yarn (motif) is crossing below the MC strand of yarn (body).

Take care in keeping the floats from puckering by gently stretching on the last sts before changing colour and loosely lay the new colour across. "Trap" the floats every 4th or 5th stitch, and avoid doing it in the same place in the next rnd.

INSTRUCTIONS

With MC, co 98 (105, 112) 119 sts with smaller needle. Pm to mark beg of rnd.

Rib:

Join to work in the round, being careful not to twist the cast on stitches. K1, p1 to end of round.

Work in Rib pattern as established until work measures 1.6" (4 cm). Change to larger needle.

ABBREVIATIONS:

acc: according	p: purl
beg: beginning	patt: pattern
CC: Contrasting colorway	pm: place marker
co: cast on	prev: previously
DPNs: double pointed needles	rem: remaining
k: knit	rep/reps: repeat/repeats
k2tog: knit two together	RS: right side
MC: main colorway	st/sts: stitch/stitches
	WS: wrong side

For the stranded hat: Pm every 10th st to facilitate knitting the charted pattern.

Stranded hat:

Knit rounds 1-43 from the Major Ursa chart. Remove extra markers (except beg of rnd).

Stockinette hat:

Knit until work measures 6 inches/16 cm (6,25 inches/17 cm, 6,75 inches/18 cm) 7 inches/19 cm.

Decrease section both hats:

Rnd 1: (K2tog, k5) to end of rnd. 84 (90, 96) 102 sts

Rnd 2: K all.

Rnd 3: (K2tog, k4) to end of rnd. 70 (75, 80) 85 sts

Rnd 4: K all.

Rnd 5: (K2tog, k3) to end of rnd. 56 (60, 64) 68 sts

Rnd 6: K all.

Rnd 7: (K2tog, k2) to end of rnd. 42 (45, 48) 51 sts

Rnd 8: K all.

Rnd 9: (K2tog, k1) to end of rnd. 28 (30, 32) 34 sts

Rnd 10: K all.

Rnd 11: K2tog to end of rnd. 14 (15, 16) 17 sts

Rnd 12: K2tog to last st, k 0 (1, 0) 1 st. 7 (8, 8) 8 sts

FINISHING

Cut yarn about 10 cm/4 inches long, and with darning needle thread yarn twice through remaining stitches, tighten up carefully and sew shut. Weave in all yarn ends.

For the stockinette hat, choose which motifs you want from the chart, and use duplicate stitch to embellish the hat. Sew on the convention badge.

Block the finished hat around a blown up balloon, according to desired size.

Optional: Make a pom pom and attach it securely to the top of the hat.

FAN FUNDS

If there was a secret organisation that had as its noble intent bringing fans across the world to meet each other, what would it be called?

This is a bad question. Not because we already have a name, but because there are many names. The shared term for the organisations that do this is 'fan funds'. Some of the funds send people across oceans to meet each other. That's how Curt Phillips and I came to Loncon from the US and Australia in 2014, representing TAFF and GUFF.

Funds across regions include NOFF for Nordic fans, and one specific to Australia/New Zealand called FFANZ.

Some countries have funds to help fan delegates travel within their own country. There are even special funds when there is a particular fan (Bruce Gillespie was one, a few years ago) who fans want to see.

Fan funds are usually competitive. Candidates are supported by some fans and voted for by all those who want to see them go. I've tried to analyse the voting patterns and attempted to come up with deep wisdom, but have not had vast success in this. If there's a pattern, it's that interesting people both win and lose these races. Anyone who stands is likely to be worth buying a drink and chatting with, whether or not they've won. Their fannish interests can range from fanzines, to comics, to cosplay, to fanfiction, to academic stuff, to -- almost everything. Our individuality matters, and also, our interests. I found this out using the long-night method during my own trip, for I met so many fans who shared my interests and we talked through the night more nights than I have courage to count.

The winner of each race is usually supported by the conventions we're elected to attend. By 'attend' I mean that we're delegates during our amazing voyage, and do all kinds of fascinating things at the convention we're attending and usually travel before or after the convention to see local fans as part of the experience. Some countries do amazing things for their fan delegates: I went to Finland after Loncon and Finland kindly put on the Northern Lights for me, on the same night that Finnish fans fed me the very best of gourmet home-made fan cooking.

Delegates become administrators for a certain period after their trip. We raise money to keep the fan funds going and give other fans experiences as amazing as those that we ourselves enjoyed. Fundraising is important: I've seen chapbooks, fanzines, bake sales, auctions, and other things. We also write reports on what we've done, so that other fans can share the joy, and we often charge for the reports so that the money goes into the fan funds for the next delegate.

After that, we're part of a network of fan fund people, and we keep in touch and we meet the new fan fund delegates. I recently fed Paul Weimer a picnic lunch at a NASA facility near me, for instance, when he represented North America at the Australian national convention. He seems to have survived.

GUFF

GUFF has been around since the late 1970s. It is always called GUFF, but what the name stands for changes according to the direction a delegate is traveling. When the trip is going from south to north, it stands for Get Up-and-over Fan Fund. From north to south, it is the Going Under Fan Fund. In 2016, Jukka Halme, the chair of Worldcon 75, represented Europe Down Under while Australian author, SF fan, and one of the people organizing Conflux in Australia, Donna Maree Hanson, will represent GUFF in northerly climes at Worldcon 75.

GUFF followed the illustrious models of DUFF and TAFF and was founded by Leigh Edmonds and Dave Langford, with input by Chris Priest. GUFF is very deeply fannish in nature for, as Priest explains, “after a few minutes of non-sober reflection in the bar, GUFF was created by unanimous consent”. They’ve documented its early history and the gripping yarn can be read as told by Chris Priest at taff.org.uk, and by Dave Langford at ansible.uk.

The fund started as an extension of the continuing and strange relationship Britain has with Australia and it grew from there. Over the years this has included some non-British delegates, and this earned the name “European” fan funds, having had an Irish, a Croatian and a Finnish European delegate in the last decade. Kylie Ding, the Australian GUFF delegate in 2012, visited Kontakt, the Eurocon held in Croatia that year, and was the first GUFF delegate to ever do so. Subsequent delegates from Down Under have taken part in European Worldcons and we are very much looking forward to the possibility of a European GUFF delegate at a New Zealand worldcon. Also, GUFF is guilty of (and very much loved for) sending Tim Tams to auction at fannish conventions.

DUFF

Back there, right now, with any luck at all, Wally the Maori Wrasse still cruises the Great Barrier Reef; the brave black wallaby still leaps amongst the spooky stones of Hanging Rock; the tame dingo (a real dingo), you can tell by his white paws and tail-tip, still accepts friendly scratches at the camel farm, and his Emu buddy still meanders the parking lot – the blackbird with the golden eyes still circles the sacred rocks and caves of Uluru; the little hens with the crested heads still skitter along the stream at the base of King’s Canyon, and strong wild horses still run and prance and leap among the bush of the outback. With any luck at all.

But forget luck! Let’s have faith that it is so, that Australia is still as it was when we went there as DUFF delegates in 2003, and let’s throw in the homely camels who ogled us over farmers’ fences, and the bumbling quokkas we met on Rottneest Island. Let’s have faith that they abide, as well, that all these critters are still as they were, and that the Australian people, too, are as they were – friendly, generous, open souls, the finest folks I’ve ever known – as sure as Uluru still glows red in the sunset, as the Reef still gleams with its rainbow hues of living coral, as the Cairns rainforests still yearn to the sky (clef by the skyrail), as the Southern Cross still shines upon that great and good land downunder.

Serving as North American delegates in the Down Under Fan Fund was a great honor for Rose-Marie and me – a great honor, a life-changing privilege. True, the campaign was beyond stressful – for me, anyway; Rosy was cool throughout – and I had to resort to hypnotherapy to tolerate even the idea of a 14-hour plane ride. (If God had meant man to fly, he would not have created the bus.) But once there, the thrill of being in a world so familiar yet so different – all culture shock cushioned by the general, genial union of science fiction fandom – it banished all anxiety by making every instant of it worthwhile.

Every DUFF delegate I’ve spoken to, every DUFF trip report I’ve read, has mirrored our joy in the journey. Of course, experiences vary – no other North American has stared into the eyes of a quokka sitting at his feet under a restaurant table, I’m sure, or clambered up a bent-over sapling to escape a pit in the midst of Hanging Rock. But more than one of us has seen the madness of footy, and ridden the great Ghan north through the Red Desert, and whispered sweet nothings into the fantastic acoustics of the Sydney Opera House. And we’ve all basked in the magic that is Australia, and the epic goodness of its people. We loved it.

I advise all North American fans reading this: run for DUFF. There’s good reason they call it the Dreamtime.

NOFF—THE NORDIC FAN FUND

Like many good things, the Nordic Fan Fund or NoFF has its beginnings at a con. During Finncon 2000 two fans, Ahrvid Engholm from Sweden and Ben Roimola from Finland, started talking about fan funds. After the con the discussion continued by email and ideas started to take form. Magnus Eriksson, a fan from Uppsala, agreed to take on the administrative duties for the Swedish part of the fund, while Ben, based in Turku, took care of the Finnish administrative duties. And so, in March 2001 the fan fund for sending fans between Sweden and Finland became a reality.

As an idea of extending the fan fund to the other Nordic countries got a firm hold of Ben's mind, the next logical step for him was to suggest NoFF, or Nordic Fan Fund, as a name for this fannish venture. Magnus liked the name and the idea of extending the fund to all Nordic countries, but he kept his feet firmly on the ground and also managed to talk some sense to Ben: Let's first get this fan fund running between Finland and Sweden, and after we've managed to do that, we can start thinking about the other Nordic countries.

The fund was a success and the first NoFFers were Johanna Ahonen from Finland, who travelled to Swecon 2001 in June, and Sten Thaning from Sweden, who travelled to Finncon 2001 a month later.

Norway got on board the NoFF train in 2002 with Martin Bull Gudmundsen as the first Norwegian NoFFer. Denmark took a few more years to get their NoFF thing going, but in 2007 Tue Sørensen was chosen to be the first NoFFing Dane. Now that Iceland has gotten its fandom into gear, we are just waiting for the first NoFFer from Iceland!

NoFF actually is, and has more or less always been, four (five once Iceland gets on board) separate fan funds. The fandom in each Nordic country decides how NoFF is administered in that country. In Finland for example NoFF gets its money mainly from an auction held at the Finnish co-operation meeting (a gathering with representatives from all corners of Finnish fandom), and the NoFFer is chosen by the previous NoFFer.

Being individually run funds, the success of NoFF has varied a lot in the different Nordic countries. In Norway and Denmark, NoFF has been hibernating for many years now, and the fund in those countries is really just waiting for someone to cut down the wall of bramble or to deactivate the hibernation pod (choose your poison). In Sweden, the NoFF engine stalled a couple of times at the beginning, but in recent years NoFF has been running like clockwork. In Finland, NoFF just works. Apart from one time when the NoFF term was extended to cover two years we have had a NoFFer every single year since 2001, and Finnish NoFFers have visited all Nordic countries.

Whether NoFF is running smoothly or coughing a little, we must remember that all NoFF fan funds have a common goal, and that goal is to get Nordic fans to visit cons in the other Nordic countries. This is a goal we need to keep on working to achieve each and every year, and maybe one year we will have five Nordic Fan Funds, all running smoothly, and all being an integral part of both their national fandoms and a joint Nordic fandom!

BEN ROIMOLA

TAFF – THE TRANSATLANTIC FAN FUND

Imagine being born when an annual project is founded, and being a Grandma or a Grandpa, while it still goes on! This is quite possible with over 60 years of TAFF, a fan fund that is still kicking and screaming!

But how did it all start? Well, there was a hell of an Irish guy, Walt Willis and some of his friends, who were looking for a possibility to bring a fan over to the Worldcon in Chicago. Soon after, the TAFF was born, to bring fans from Europe to North America. But TAFF is not only about attending a certain convention. It is about getting in touch with fans from another continent, not only at a con, but by visiting them before and/or after the big event. That is what TAFF was for me; definitely not a relict of former times, but an amazing experience and a direct contact with a fandom so different, yet so similar to the one I am in. With the political situation in the US becoming harsher, it is even more important than ever to cherish the friendships among fans across the ocean, for a better understanding of each other and hopefully, for a better future!

Home of the geeks

Terrakoti ("terra home") is the office and club space of six Finnish societies, located at Student House B, in Turku. It is a meeting place for everyone interested in science fiction, fantasy, horror, comics, Japanese popular culture, console gaming or roleplaying.

- Science Fiction Culture Cabinet at the University of Turku (Tutka)
- Turku Science Fiction Society (TSFS)
- Turku University Role and Strategy Playing Society Tyrmä
- Turku Anime and Manga Society Senpai
- Academic Nintendo Club (ANC)
- Society for Strange Interests at the Åbo Akademi University (FUI)

Terrakoti offers an extensive science fiction and fantasy library, equally extensive board game library, all Finnish sf zines, open hours three times a week, movie nights, parties, like-minded company and general geekery.

FANDOM IN SOUTH AFRICA

Science Fiction South Africa was founded in June 1969 and became Science Fiction and Fantasy around 10 years ago.

We have always considered ourselves a literary club and, to this end, have been holding an annual short story competition since the early 70s. It has become a tradition to publish the winning and top 10 stories in our quarterly magazine PROBE, as well as book reviews and various other Science and SF and Fantasy related articles. PROBE 172 has just been published and posted out to members in SA and around the world, some in electronic form.

We held our first convention in 1978, but are not currently holding one as our numbers are very small.

We do have a large library, currently more than 2000 books from the very earliest SF to the latest SF and Fantasy.

We have a website (www.sffsa.org.za) where previous copies of PROBE can be downloaded, and a calendar of what we are doing is available.

CHINESE FANDOM

The history of Chinese fandom can be traced back to 1980, when the first Chinese sf fan club was formed at the Shanghai International Studies University. In 1981, Science Fiction Research Associations were founded in several cities in China, and then all were swept away by the anti-spiritual pollution campaigns. It wasn't until 1988 that Chinese fandom thrived again, when the Science Fiction Literature Committee was founded by the Sichuan Writer's Association, chaired by Tong Enzheng.

In 1990, Yao Haijun established the Chinese Science Fiction Readers' Association with the help of his fanzine Nebula, which played an extremely important role in the development of modern Chinese fandom, with 40 issues published from 1989 to 2007.

In the 1990s, regional fandoms and university clubs boomed all around China. In 1998, Chinese Science Fiction Online Association was established, followed by a prospering scene in online fan organizations. Numerous netzines also appeared in this period.

The Galaxy Award, first established in 1986, is the highest honor an author can achieve in the Chinese science fiction field, and for a long time it was the only one. It is organized by Science Fiction World Magazine. The Chinese Nebula Award was established in 2010. The major annual SF events in China take place around these two awards. Usually, there are con-like carnivals for fans. They do not follow specific rules, but usually involve award ceremonies, red-carpet walks, late night roadside barbecues and drinking. More new awards were launched in recent years.

Nowadays, two of the most active fan organizations in China are SF AppleCore, based in Shanghai, which holds the annual Shanghai Science Fiction & Fantasy Festival, as well as monthly gatherings, and World Chinese Science Fiction Association, which organizes the Chinese Nebula Award and aims at nurturing Chinese SF.

FANDOM IN ISRAEL

Israel is a small and densely packed country. It's a small market for a niche genre, but the short distances and common enthusiasm make for a thriving and tight-knit fan community. Israeli fandom has always been shaped by what material actually makes it here. A translation boom in the late 70s matched the accompanying flourish of fan activity, and a dip until the late 90s mirrored a diminished fandom. But increasingly, many fans don't rely on translations, preferring the immense variety available abroad (Israeli fandom is full of immigrants from America, Russia, and others, often serving as a bridge to fandom overseas). I recall much of 90s fandom was devoted to simply sharing hard-to-find material! Today, big publishers translate mostly blockbusters, but small publishers and magazines work to bring other worthy work to Hebrew-speakers.

In 1996, the Israeli Society for Science Fiction and Fantasy was founded, and has since become the primary hub of activity. The ISSFF organizes conventions, administers awards, publishes an annual anthology series, and organizes a bevy of smaller, local events. Its biggest convention is ICon, a three-day convention in Tel Aviv, drawing thousands of visitors for lectures, panels, fan productions, roleplaying games, and whatever else our community comes up with. Meanwhile, many specialized groups and societies focus on particular passions in the field, holding activities of their own or gathering under the ISSFF's auspices.

Original Israeli material is limited by our small market, but intriguing nonetheless. With SF&F's recent rising popularity, we've been seeing more original novels published, and in wider variety. In short fiction, legendary magazine "Fantasia 2000" paved the way beginning in 1978, and we've had steady short fiction venues since the mid-90s. Typically, recurring Israeli themes include the Israel-Palestinian conflict, religious tensions, military service, and drawing upon Jewish, Biblical, and Talmudic sources. The ISSFF is currently translating winners of the Geffen award, seeking publication reaching wider audiences.

JAPANESE FANDOM

When talking about Japanese fandom, we first have to talk about Takumi Shibano. He and his wife Sachiko were the Fan Guests of Honor of the 54th World Science Fiction Convention L.A.con III, in 1996, and he was the Fan Guest of Honor of the 65th World Science Fiction Convention, Nippon 2007. He established the first Japanese science fiction fan group and published the first Sci-fi fanzine, called 'Uchu-jin' (meaning 'Space Dusts'), in 1957. Many professional science fiction writers, critics, translators and editors were part of Uchu-jin in their early amateur years. Uchu-jin lasted until his death in 2010, leaving 203 volumes in total. (His memorial issue, vol. 204 was published in 2013 as its final issue.) He was one of the organizers of Japan's first national science fiction convention, MEG-CON, in 1962, and he subsequently established Japan Science Fiction Fan Group Council in 1965 to administer Seiun Awards and site selection. He had attended many Worldcons, as well as Japan Science Fiction Conventions, and had put both national and global fans together during his whole life. Although his fan group 'Uchu-jin' is no longer active, Japan Science Fiction Convention has been running annually since 1962 to present, and so is the Japan Science Fiction Fan Group Council. The 56th Japan Science Fiction Convention, Donburacon LL, will be held at Shizuoka city on 26th and 27th August, expecting around 1000 to 1200 attending members. We see over 10 active local conventions run by various fan groups from Hokkaido to Shimane, and have many fan gatherings and book club meetings, mainly in Greater Tokyo area, Nagoya area, and Kansai area. Science Fiction Fan Associations formed by university students are also actively publishing sci-fi fanzines and selling their work at tables in Comic Market or other Dojinshi markets. Most conventions and fan gatherings are in Japanese only, but a convention called Hal-con has bilingual programs with consecutive interpretation, and both Japan Science Fiction Convention and Science Fiction Seminar have bilingual programs when they have guests from overseas. Local conventions hosted in ryokan (Japanese traditional style hotel) are often an all-nighter convention that ends in the morning. (I think this kind of convention is unique, and different from other countries' conventions.) Many of the first generation of Japanese fandom are now gone, and the core fans running conventions and events are mostly in their 50s and 60s, but new generations are joining continuously, so I hope Japanese fandom will keep evolving.

Bucheon International Fantastic Film Festival. Bucheon, 13–23 July 2018.

In the past, the entry point for SF fans tended to be translated fiction, mainly English-language works. Things are now changing. Various gateways have appeared, and more local writers entered the scene. Now, established authors who have released stories over ten years are making a name for themselves. Web-based fantasy fiction has the biggest market share over any other fiction genre in Korea. All kinds of creators (novelists, comic artists, directors, scenario writers, etc.) who are interested in SF hold a small workshop at Sobaeksan Observatory every year. The Annual SF award is in its fourth year.

There are efforts to interact with other fandoms abroad, too: SF&F Library Korea is in touch with Japan SF fandom, Webzine 거울(mirror) is working with China's Future Affairs Administration, and Korean SF books are being translated into English and will be published soon. Some writers are active in such cultural exchange themselves, and initiatives such as SFFD (www.sffd.co.kr) aim to build and maintain a platform where SF fans around the world can interact together.

So many things are happening all at once. Change is coming on fast. Watching it unfold is really fascinating – but making it, is even better.

FANDOM IN SOUTH KOREA

SF has a small but strong fan base in South Korea.

Of course “small” doesn't mean no one reads or watches SF in Korea. There have been several SF best sellers and box office hits. These days SF/fantasy elements can be found in many Korean films, TV shows, games, and comics— though people often don't recognize these elements as being SF or fantasy.

So “small but strong” only refers to the actual size of fandom in the strictest sense.

“SF is still in the process of putting down roots in Korea (<http://www.gordsellar.com/series/sf-in-south-korea/>).” I think this is true, and the process seems to be going well.

Australia is a big country and there's a big divide between east and west. Compared to the USA, for example, there aren't that many of us Australians and even less fans. According to the Australian Bureau of Statistics our current population is 24.5 million people. It is quicker to fly from the east coast of Australia to New Zealand than it is to fly to Perth.

Organised fandom, being areas where SF conventions are held, tend to be in the capital cities of each state. Perth and Melbourne hold regular SF conventions and bounce the Australian National Science Fiction Convention (Natcon) between them most years. Perth conventions are usually held under the Swancon banner and Melbourne has been under Convergence or Continuum banners. Occasionally, one of the other cities will put up their hand. Canberra, which runs Conflux, and Brisbane (Conjure and Contact) have hosted two Natcons each, and Hobart in Tasmania and Adelaide in South Australia have each hosted one Natcon in the last fifteen years. There are also pockets of fan clubs, some with deep roots in the past, such as the Australian SF Foundation and the Melbourne Science Fiction Club.

Canberra, where I hail from, has a population of just under 400 000 people. As it is the capital city of Australia and the government centre, there are a high number of graduate workers, with relatively high incomes, who are also big readers. The core number of fans, though, is relatively small. I would have to take a guess at between 100 and 200 people. Sydney fans come to Canberra for SF cons. For some reason, unbeknownst to me, Sydney does not host Natcons, not in the last 15 years at least. But there has been a Magic Casements Festival, run through the NSW Writers' Centre, and more recently that was replaced by the Speculative Fiction Festival, run more on a writers conference line, but with blurred edges to fan type styles of presentation, also through the NSW Writers' Centre. In the last 15 years, more aspiring writers have been joining the fan ranks, particularly through conventions such as Conflux and the Brisbane conventions. Recently, conventions have taken on specific flavours. Melbourne, for instance, has a fan focus while Canberra has a writer and, sometimes, an artist focus. Note these are straight literary SF cons. We also have topic specific conventions, like Doctor Who and media conventions, starting with Star Trek and now Supanova and Oz Comicons that feature 'cosplay'. There are also writer conventions such as Genrecon.

NZ FANDOM

Fandom in New Zealand was around a long time before the first formal National Convention in 1979. Fandom started being organised, as these things often do, through the university clubs and grew to a National Association of Science Fiction (NASF) which had branches in our major centres. In the 80s, NASF gave way to various individual clubs such as Phoenix Science Fiction Society, The Science Fiction Modellers Club (later Stella Nova), New Zealand Doctor Who Fan Club, and many others. During this time there were often multiple conventions each year.

With the rise of the internet and expos (even here in far away New Zealand), the National Science Fiction convention each year has become a focus of personal interactions. In 2002 we created the Science Fiction and Fantasy Association of New Zealand (SFFANZ), which administers our fan voted awards, the Sir Julius Vogel awards, presented at the National Conventions. New Zealand supports a wide range of groups with a wide a range of focuses, eg. Doctor Who, Steampunk, LARPing, and vigorous, ever growing SF writer's groups and collectors' communities.

A group of experienced fans are running a bid for New Zealand in 2020 for the 2020 Worldcon.

FANDOM IN AUSTRIA – A SUBJECTIVE VIEW FROM THE EASTERN BLOCK

I'm from Poland so if you want to read a subjective view on Austrian fandom from an Austrian fan and writer check out Nina Horvath's article on <http://rantalica.com/219/austrian-fandom/>.

My view of fandom in the western countries is spoiled by really big conventions in Eastern Europe with lots of young people. Fandom in Austria is different. It is not organised as it is in Poland. There are no national conventions or general SF conventions. (For the sake of understanding – let's pretend that SF is the fantastic in general.) There are no big publishing houses that publish SF books. There are no literary contests for SF.

So what is there? There are great people if you have the chance to meet and get to know them. There are some fine writers. There is passion for the things that interest you. Austrian fans meet regularly in small informal groups. It is very difficult to find out about those groups if you don't know a member of them. They don't advertise, they don't publish magazines – at least I haven't found anything like that and I live in Austria for 6 years now.

I meet regularly with the Science Fiction Gruppe Wien, which was founded in 1955! And some of the founders are still regulars! We meet, we chat, we enjoy a short programme, be it a speech on various topics or an introduction to a local publisher.

And then there are the Star Wars fans who recently made a great movie called "Regrets of the Past" – check it out on YouTube! Or the Trekkies whom I've seen during the 50th Anniversary of Star Trek. And there's Perry Rhodan. And Anime. And ComicCons. And the wonderful, privately owned but open to anyone, library at Villa Fantastica in Vienna. All in a small scale but with a big heart.

CROATIAN FANDOM

Croatia is a small country with a big fandom. In a population of just four million, it features 7 annual conventions – Fantastikon, Istrakon, SFeraKon, Marsonikon, SkOn, Liburnicon, Rikon – and 2 annual events focused on SF literature, The Festival of Fantastic Literature in Istria and SF Week in Zadar. With the exception of the last one – which is held at the local Faculty of Philosophy and is academic in nature – all the events are fan run, mostly by non-profit societies. The eldest among them is SFera, the Zagreb based SF society that is behind SFeraKon, the largest SF convention in Croatia, gathering up to 2000 members.

SFera was founded in 1976 and this marked the beginning of organized fandom in former Yugoslavia. In July of the same year, the biggest publishing house in the country started publishing Sirius, an SF magazine featuring translations of classic SF pieces, contemporary genre fiction, and most importantly, local work. With a circulation of 100 000 and the editorial practice of explaining, in a special section, the reasons certain domestic stories were rejected, Sirius played a major role in the development of Croatian genre literature, and won an ESFS Award.

SFera established the SFera Award, a juried award that became Croatian only in 1990. Strong disagreement over the recipients of the award led not to bitter fandom feuds, but to a new award, named Artefakt. It is run by the 3. Zmaj Society, the organizers of Rikon. Artefakt just announced they are enriching the awards in Croatia with a YA category, which is a first.

And 3. zmaj has announced a special contribution to fandom award. Croatians like to think that their SF convention landscape, as well as their SF fandom, is as rich as it is because of the differences, variations and occasional clashes in views and tastes of the fans and not despite them.

All of the conventions follow the Worldcon example, as it was set up by Krsto Mažuranić, Croatian fan and one of the Cro fandom founding fathers, who is still very fondly remembered by fans in all fandom. With a twist: Croatian fandom tends to be rather young, compared to UK and US fandoms, there are kids running freely all over the place all the time and both the cons and the societies behind them tend to have women running them.

Outside the conventions, all Croatian societies have year round programs, featuring book clubs, gaming nights, movie projections, talks, writing workshops and initiatives. After the 1995 Glasgow Worldcon, SFeraKon started an annual short story collection which has since been copied by Istrakon, Marsonikon and SkOn, enriching the Croatian SF literature. Since fiction writing is not commercial in Croatia, this also means that all writers are fans and involved with conventions, so there is no divide between professionals and fans.

CZECHIA

Czech fandom (or Czechoslovak as it was then; the two nations retain close fannish ties) dates from founding of the first SF club in April 1979. Fanzines followed a year or two after, and the first con in 1982. Fandom grew quickly and the eighties turned out to be its silver age, at least. After the Velvet Revolution came a new boom, but also people gafiating to other activities, growing generation conflicts, and finally splitting into many “fandoms”: first trekkies and Tolkienists, then manga/anime scene, and now everything you can imagine. Complaints recur that (like in the West) the traditional literary fandom is aging and losing attractiveness for the young.

The national convention, called Parcon (after the city of Pardubice where it started), moves between organizers, usually in summer. It is linked with the Karel Čapek Award, a short fiction contest whose winners are now published in annual anthologies. The society that votes on it (together with its Slovak counterpart; Parcon goes to Slovakia once or twice a decade) comprises about 20 mostly smaller-town and older-generation SF clubs as there is little perceived need for a formal organization. Dozens of other cons range from tiny to a “pop culture festival” whose thousands of attendees take over a small town for ten days.

Much SF is published, both translated and by Czech/Slovak authors; even two SF monthlies manage to keep afloat (see Julie’s website julienovakova.com for articles on this). Fanzines have been replaced by websites – there are at least 5 updated daily and much of fannish life has also moved online. Contacts abroad are personal rather than systematic or institutional, and there is virtually no English-language programming except occasional GoHs. Czechia hosted Eurocon in 2002 and 2010 (jointly with Poland and Slovakia); no further bid is in sight.

DANISH SF FANDOM

From the mid 1960s, a lot of translated science fiction became available in Denmark, but it took ten more years for the first fan organization (Science Fiction Cirklen) to appear. Both small and large conventions were held up through the 1980s, but the number of active fans went from hundreds to only a few handfuls at the time of the last big convention of the 20th century, Fabula 96. But as the traditional book reading fandom diminished, other fandoms appeared, such as Star Trek fandom, comics fandom, and the fans of Japanese pop culture. The J-Popcon convention and the Copenhagen Comics conventions both became much bigger than any traditional SF convention ever was.

At the start of the 21st century, the Danish SF fandom was almost dead. Even the very small Dancon convention had become irregular. Then several things happened: a group of fans started Foreningen Fantastik, publishing the fanzine Himmelskibet and making a new yearly convention, Fantasticon. At about the same time, Science Fiction Cirklen began publishing science fiction books with both Danish fiction and translations. With more active Danish fans, a bid was made for Eurocon 2007, which attracted even more people to fandom. This coincided with the appearance of several small publishers specializing in science fiction, fantasy, and especially horror.

Looking back now at what happened at the start of the century, it seems that we were a bit too optimistic about the growth of fandom. While many people found fandom during those years, a lot of people left fandom for various reasons. And the book fandom is getting older, while most young people get into various other fandoms like cosplay, games, and comics. But we still manage to do a Fantasticon and a lot of publications each year.

Estcon 2018, probably the third week of July 2018

Estonian convention, Estcon, was being held. Unlike other science fiction conventions in the world, Estcon takes place mostly outdoors, and the program tends to be less academic in nature, concentrating more on relaxation and open communication. But this does not mean that the program is superficial. There are presentations, LARP, a book fair, and the announcement of the Estonian science fiction Stalker Award winners. Estcon is one of the fandom's most important events of the whole year. It is attended by a large majority of Estonian translators, writers, publishers, etc. The number of participants is constantly rising; for example, in 2015 the attendance was 105 people.

There are also smaller regular monthly meetings in Tartu and Tallinn. These events have been held for more

FANDOM IN ESTONIA

Although there were science-fiction fans and authors before World War II, they existed in a rather chaotic and random manner. A truly active fandom began to emerge in 1996, with the creation of the sf2001@obs.ee mailing list. This allowed fans to communicate quickly and easily. That, in turn, led to the fandom's quick rise. By 1998, the first than fifteen years and are quite popular. The event in Tartu occurs on the second Friday of each month, and the Tallinn event is on the third Friday of each month. These events usually last until midnight. People buy and sell books and chat during the evening.

The Estonian fandom would not be what it is without its web fanzines. In 1998, the online magazine Algernon was founded. In the beginning, Algernon was a place where new authors could get published for the first time. But after some years, Algernon got re-structured, publishing frequency decreased, and the importance of the magazine declined. Currently, the magazine is published quarterly or even less frequently.

Right now, the most popular and frequently published fanzine is Reaktor, which was founded in late 2011. In addition to stories, Reaktor also publishes news, book and movie reviews, and more. The magazine is published once a month, usually at the end of the month. Reaktor also published three collections of their stories as books.

The Stalker award, Estcon, and other science-fiction events are organized by the ESFA (Estonian Science Fiction Association), which has been operating since 1995 and currently has 65 members.

FINNISH FANDOM — SHORT BIO

The roots of Finnish science fiction are in translations of popular science news, and translations of now classic utopias and dystopias of 19th century. The first Finnish SF fans – writers, translators and readers – in 1950s, had individual ties to English and Swedish SF literature. The Finnish term "tieteiskirjallisuus" – was created then, several SF writing competitions were held, and 57 SF novels were published during the 1950s. However, the Finnish fandom was not born in 1950s. There was a plan for a "science fiction club," but unfortunately the organizer died in a car accident.

The first SF society was founded in Turku in 1976 (along with the magazine, Spin), with 36 members, and during the 1980s major SF societies were born. Publishing, writing, and open events were the core activities from the beginning. No wonder the amount of attendees of the national SF event, Finncon, has been between 3000 to 10 000, depending on the city where it is held. The National SF Writers Association was founded in 1984, with strong influence for the birth of Finnish Weird. Events are funded by cities and cultural foundations, and Finncon also by the Ministry of Culture. We have the national Finncon society to take care of the paperwork.

What else is Finnish fandom? No ageism. A family. A deeply feminist bunch of friendly people. Writers mixed with readers, publishers, and art people. Annual Finncon, Åcon, programming in book fairs, local events like Lokacon and Tamfan, strong ongoing writers school as Usva-writing camps, writing competitions like Portti, quality magazines like Tähtivaeltaja, semi professional publishing like Osuuskumma, international secret agents like Cheryl “Finnish Granny” Morgan, top academic stuff like the Finnish Society for Science Fiction and Fantasy Research (FINFAR) with its peer-reviewed journal, Fafnir. And Finncon: a three day festival with all fields of fantastic, all media, all science, all art, and all the good beer and food in Finland in at least three languages – Finnish, English and Swedish. Oh, and it’s free.

WOLF VON WITTING

GERFANY

The roots of German fandom, or Gerfany, reach back into the late 1920s. Grievously, data concerning its proto-fandom was lost in WWII. Walter Ernsting is hailed as the founding father of its contemporary sf-fandom. In 1955, he inaugurated the SFCD (Science Fiction Club Deutschland) and with it launched one of the country’s first fanzines, Andromeda. But the honour of running the first convention, not only in Gerfany, but the first convention not held on native English speaking soil, goes to Anne Steul who, supported by Jan Jansen (Belgium) and the young Benford brothers, ran the first WetzCon early in 1956.

If Walter Ernsting was the father, then the Brit Julian Parr’s role as birth-helper should not be underestimated. The primary tool for fandom creation was a forum for like-minded people. Parr emphasised the significance of giving fans the possibility to contact each other. For decades the readers-pages of the Perry Rhodan-series provided this forum. Few found fandom in any other way. Their zines in the 50s and 60s were very similar to UK fanzines. In the 70s and 80s, fannish activity erupted into unfathomable numbers of clubs, fanzines, and events. Many headstrong fans never did, or stopped glancing at, how things were done in the UK and the US. They found their own style and direction. In nature, the German fan leans towards serious constructivism and fails to appreciate fannish values (the interest in fandom itself, rather than in SF).

Today, Gerfany contains a diverse multitude of clubs, magazines, and events. The SFCD with its more than 300 members holds the torch for literature-based fandom and conventions. With SFCD, not only the fannish spirit of Ernsting, but also his Big Heart is alive and well. Gerfany is a fandom in transition. What the future brings, only time can tell.

SHORT INTRODUCTION TO HUNGARIAN SF

Science fiction has a long tradition in Hungary. The fore-runner works of the modern Hungarian SF were already written in the second half of the 19th century, merely impressed by Verne's novels. For example A jövő század regénye (Novel of the Next Century) by Mór Jókai.

During socialism, book publishing also became a state monopoly, and remained such until the late eighties. Under the direction of Péter Kuczka, between 1972 and 1995, numerous short stories appeared in translation in the Galaktika magazine. Almost all of the important novels have been published in excellent translation in a book series alongside the magazine. The editors were relatively free to choose from both Western and Eastern authors, and the censorship rarely intervened.

The most known author from this time is Péter Zsoldos, whose novel, Távoli Tűz (Distant Fire) is a masterpiece of the Hungarian SF. Besides, István Nemere, whose youth SF novels acclaimed a great success in the same time, must be mentioned.

After the change of the regime in 1989, Galaktika went out of breath, on the one hand because the editors did not open for the more and more popular fantasy and cyberpunk genre, and in the other hand the magazine did not provide publication for the new generation of Hungarian authors.

The centralized SF book publishing was replaced by small publishers in 1-2 years. The Hungarian authors have finally been able to publish. In the nineties, important books such as the Kiálts farkast! (Cry Wolf!) by András Gáspár,

Chaos series by István Nemes, or the Városalapítók (City Founders) by Sándor Szélesi were published. (Interestingly, the Hungarian authors were asked by the publishers to use American pen-names at that time.)

In the eighties, there were a lot of SF clubs countrywide, but most of them transformed, melted, or disappeared with the appearance of role-playing games and the internet. (Solaria, which was perhaps the first online magazine in Europe in 1995, quickly created a very strong SF community.) The national SF organization, Avana Association was founded in 1997, in the same year when Péter Zsoldos passed away. Avana continued to organize the annual national convention, the HungaroCon, and founded the Péter Zsoldos Award for the best SF works.

In the 2000s several magazines tried to fill the void Galaktika had left behind. Átjáró (Gateway) magazine published quality sci-fi and fantasy stories until 2004, and also organized large-scale SF events in Hungary, for which foreign authors and actors were invited to Hungary for the first time.

During this period, important novels were published, such as Keringés by Zoltán László, the Mysterious Universe series from Tibor Fonyódi and Sándor Szélesi. Contemporary SF and fantasy authors are József Antal, Gyula Böszörményi, Júlia Goldman, Benedek F. Tóth, Csilla Kleinheincz and Botond Markovics.

Galaktika magazine was restarted, and a plenty of Hungarian online SF magazines and blogs can be found now on the internet. Our national convention, the HungaroCon has been organized for 37 years, however, it has transformed in recent years by adding more focus on visual genres and cosplay. And there are many more events for the SF and fantasy lovers.

FANDOM IN IRELAND

Irish fandom has a long and venerable history. It's always been open, an environment where everyone is welcome, as long as they're nice to each other! The creators are fans and the fans creators, as it has always been since the earliest days. The Irish respect and admire those who can spin a tale or paint a picture, but who would the storytellers and artists be without an audience?

Every university in the country has an SF society of one form or another and conventions dot the landscape. While the majority of these are centred around gaming or anime, this is all part of the tapestry of Irish fandom. While the Dublin Comic Con attracts nearly twenty thousand people, the much smaller size of most Irish events makes them no less enjoyable, passionate, or engaging.

The Irish National SF Convention, Octocon, has been at the heart of Irish fandom for many years, held annually in Dublin. The Guests of Honour over the years form an impressive list and all of them, from the veteran authors to the rising stars of Science Fiction, speak highly of its warmth and welcome.

Octocon has also formed the springboard for Irish fandom's various international forays. After hosting Eurocon for the first time in 1997, it came back to Dublin in 2014 in the guise of Shamrokon. Both of these events took the place of Octocon that year and they wouldn't have been possible without it. 2014 also featured the official launch of Dublin 2019, the bid to host Worldcon in Ireland for the first time and to introduce thousands more people to this passionate community on the western edge of Europe!

FANDOM IN ITALY

Italian fandom was born in the 60s. A few local fan groups were created, but the main communication tool was the fanzine. Many fanzines started and died in those years, but a few persisted.

In 1972, the first Italian convention was held. It was called SFIR (Science Fiction Italian Roundabout), but was soon renamed Italcon. The 1972 Italcon was also the first Eurocon. Italcon has been held almost every year since then, alternating between different locations and organizing committees. It also spawned other events, some of them focusing instead on TV or cinema. The archetypical Italian convention is held in a hotel, and all panels, meetings and other activities stop during lunchtime and dinnertime, because everybody moves to the hotel restaurant for a communal meal. Meals are very important in Italy, and the quality of a hotel's cuisine can make a difference in a successful convention. This model was also followed by other media-oriented conventions in Italy. Foreign participants in the 2009 Eurocon in Italy also appreciated this way of life.

In recent years, Italcon was absorbed by a Star Trek/Star Wars convention, and attendance in its literary events almost disappeared. While there are plans to revamp Italcon by moving it elsewhere, starting from 2018, currently the only residential literary SF convention in Italy is Deepcon, while Stranimondi and Aetnacon are two events which have writers as Guests of Honour but don't follow the typical Italian convention format.

The golden era of fan clubs was in the 80s, however, most of them didn't survive the decade.

Informal gatherings offer another important milieu of exchange. In Milan, the "Cenacolo Milanese" used to meet for dinner every month until a few years ago, and it got its name from Leonardo Da Vinci's Last Supper. Some other groups gathered around individual authors. For example the late Vittorio Curtoni had periodic meetings with his friends (writers and readers alike), and also hosted a spoof prize (the "Sviccata") every year, awarded to the worst short story. Nowadays, some writers (e.g. Valerio Evangelisti) are still the focus of such gatherings.

Many of the groups which currently exist are composed of writers and aspiring writers. Some current examples are the Connettivisti and the Carboneria Letteraria.

HUGO'S HEIRS – FANDOM IN LUXEMBOURG

While fandom in Luxembourg can look back at a number of ups and downs, a continuously broad spectrum organized fandom has only recently surfaced.

Luxembourg, as many Science Fiction fans know, is where Hugo Gernsback was born in 1884. Beside the activities he is well known for in fannish circles, Gernsback was also a proud Luxembourgish, speaking up in the country's favour on many accounts and using his exotic origins to emphasize his persona. Luxembourg's fans are acutely aware of his person, and staunchly proud of it. Many a young, or new fan, turns to their fellow country(wo)man, when they find out and there is true happiness on their face because of the realisation that the small grand duchy gave the world something special.

Organised fandom's earliest traces are found in the early eighties' SaarCon 5, which to the best of my knowledge was heavily Perry Rhodan-leaning. It was organized by, among others, Lucien Schilling, in the second biggest city, Esch-sur-Alzette. Next came an initiative by Claude Peiffer, who is still an active author, and his friends who edited a Perry-Fanzine in the late eighties and early nineties. As all things go, their lives eventually got busy and real life took its toll.

Science Fiction & Fantasy Society Luxembourg, the current representative body of fans, was created in 1995, initially as a gaming society, but with the promotion of all things SF/F/H in mind. In fact, the first version of the association's statutes stipulated that the goal of the group was to organize a convention to bring likeminded individuals together. SFFS is now preparing to organize their 5th edition of LuxCon in April 2018, and hopes to yet again expand on the 5000 people in attendance in 2017.

FANDOM AROUND SEA LEVEL.

From the sixties on, fandom in the Netherlands has waxed and waned with the tides. The eldest two fan clubs are NCSF (the Netherlands contact center for Science Fiction) and SF Terra, which originated from the German Perry Rhodan Fandom. At the height of the fandom, in the eighties, they organized their own conventions with thousands of attending members. Other, still existing groups from the 'good old days' are the Star Trek fanclub The Flying Dutch, and the Tolkien fanclub Unquendor. Nowadays, fandom is found in a much wider variety. Fantasy fandom resulted in very big fantasy festivals such as Elfia and Castlefest (25 000+ visitors), where music, cos-tuming, shopping and meeting other fans are the most important ingredients.

In recent years 'Comic con style' conventions are gaining in popularity. Books make up only a small part of the dealer rooms in the big conventions.

At first they were strictly commercially aimed, but fan programming is getting more and more attention. Fan clubs based on movies or series (Star Wars, Star Trek, Doctor Who, Harry Potter, The Walking Dead, Suicide Squad, Ghostbusters, Lord of the Rings) find their fans at the big events by manning their own photo booth, selling their own merchandise, cosplaying in groups or bringing their own TARDIS. The biggest comic con in the Netherlands is Dutch Comic Con. Smaller, fan-run conventions are having a hard time right now.

There are several fan-run fantastic writing competitions in the Dutch language area of which Fantastels and Harland Awards are the biggest, with 150–200 contestants yearly. Quite new and popular is the Harland Award for the best Dutch fantastic book of the year. The Harland Awards are awarded annually at the Day of the Fantastic Book, a literary festival organized by SFG, the Foundation for the Fantastic Genre.

FANDOM IN POLAND

Polish fans love conventions. There are between 80 and 100 conventions in Poland per year (including manga events, big LARPs, etc). Almost all of those are fan-run and they usually gather a few hundred people, but the biggest one, Pyrkon, has over 40,000 members now. It is very rare for us to have purely literary conventions – most of events in Poland have at least a small gaming part and a lot of cons are, in fact, multigenre. Games are represented in multiple ways – board games, LARPs, video games and, last but not least, RPGs.

In terms of numbers, Polish fandom is rapidly expanding. A few years ago, the biggest convention had “just” a few thousand members, and now it is an order of magnitude bigger. Such a rapid pace of expansion makes it difficult to pass all of our traditions along to the newcomers, so the Polish fandom is changing over time.

Our national convention, Polcon, is held annually in the second half of the year (usually in August). Every year it is held in a different city, which is chosen two years in advance. Polcon is devoted mainly to literature and science, but all fans are welcomed and usually there are also attractions for manga and pop culture fans, and of course for gamers. During the convention, the Janusz A. Zajdel Award is given to the authors of the best short story and the best novel out of those published in the previous year. The winners are chosen by the Polcon members, which means that the award system is similar to that of the Hugo.

Unfortunately, the majority of Polish conventions offers Polish programme items only (or with a few English programme items added here and there). Pyrkon is the exception, as for a few years now it has been attracting fans from abroad. Still, English-speaking fans are commonplace at Polish conventions, so you can enjoy Polish events even without attending programme.

THE PORTUGUESE SCIENCE FICTION FANDOM. A BRIEF HISTORY.

The primordial start of the Portuguese Fandom may be set in the 1960s with the ephemeral appearance of the Clube de Ficção Científica in Lisbon, whose membership included Romeu de Melo and Natália Correia. Since then, nothing happened for years until the 1980s with the appearance of the Sci Fi fanzine Nebulosa, a new and equally short lived association – this time in Porto – dubbed Associação Portuguesa de Ficção Científica e Fantasia Portuguesa, the Portuguese edition of the Omnia magazine and a few texts regarding the Portuguese Sci Fi paradigm in England, Spain, Holland and Japan.

It was only with the proximity of the 1990s at hand that a new magazine, Mundos, came up along with the orchestration of the Encontros de FC in Cascais, whose five editions led to the creation of Simetria, an association whose lifespan failed to outlast the ones previously mentioned.

Indeed, it was only until the early 2000s that we saw the very first publishing boom: Paradoxo, Dragão Quântico, Bang!, Hyperdrive, Phantastes, Dagon, Fénix and Conto Fantástico. This decade was also marked by the creation of the Bibliowiki Bibliographical Sci Fi website, written entirely in Portuguese, and the very first Forúm Fantástico in Lisbon, currently in its eleventh edition.

The first five years of our present decade saw the Dagon, Fénix and Conto Fantástico fanzines continuing on with their issues, with the Bang! magazine along for the ride. New publishing projects also left their mark, such as Lusitânia, Trêma and ISF. Since 2013, with the sole exception of the Bang! magazine, none of them ever came out again. Yet, amidst this abrupt decay, the existence of the Fantasy e Cº stands out as a fine example of online disclosure of material produced in the bosom of the fandom itself.

The Portuguese fandom is small, disorganized, lacks a dedicated club or association, and it scants itself away from International event participation – such as the Eurocons and Worldcons. Thus, its isolation stands out as a consequence of a plethora of internal wars, which it continues to get itself involved in to this day.

VICTOR ANESTIN in Craiova (1982), and NOVA in Sibiu (1980). Bucharest, as the capital, hosts several groups today, the biggest of which today is the Romanian Science Fiction Society.

The first mimeographed fan magazine was SOLARIS (Bucharest, July 1972) with one hundred copies. Later in 1972, PARADOX was published by H.G.WELLS Club of Timisoara as the first printed fanzine with 7,500 copies distributed nationwide. The most influential SF magazine for more than ten years was HELION (first series), first published on March 25th 1981, and distributed nationwide; starting 1982, the series came out in 25,000 copies. The year 1983 witnessed the birth of the ANTICIPATIA Almanach, coming out first in 60,000 copies and later in 80,000 copies. Other important yet ephemeral publications were FANTASTIC MAGAZIN (Iasi, 1986), ORION (Craiova, 1988), and ARGONAUT (Iasi, 1987).

There were over fifty SF clubs in Romania in 1989, some operating periodically and many occasionally and ephemerally. This number went down after 1990. Very few youngsters joined the older previous groups, but a new generation gathers in the Wolf Pack's Club, which attracts young fans and young writers. The Cygnus Society in Suceava follows a different path, mixing the new with the old – almost like the Jedi Academy, with all ages represented from teens to nearly-centenarians.

The new wave of SF publications, authors, fans, and clubs came around 1980 and marked the emergence of a few important Romanian SF centers. The SF clubs have always been creative workshops that have fueled publishers with prose, comic strips or scripts.

Between 1992 and 1996, the weekly SF JOURNAL Bucharest was the main magazine dedicated to new

AS ALWAYS, FANS EXPECTED: A BRIEF HISTORY OF ROMANIAN FANDOM

As expected, the socio-political turmoil in Romania reflects itself in its fandom. While our numbers are few, we express ourselves each and every way possible, and for many, Romanian politics inspires more passion than a football match.

The first Romanian Science Fiction clubs came into being in 1969: first SOLARIS in Bucharest, followed by H.G.WELLS in Timisoara. They were enthusiasts of the Science Fiction Stories collection (1955-1974), whose editor-in-chief over the years was the tireless Adrian Rogoz. Similar clubs were later organized in Craiova: Henri Coanda (1970), and in Bucharest: TAHIONII (The Tachyons) in 1972. The first National Convention was organized in Bucharest in 1972.

There were over ten clubs in 1978 in Romania and over thirty in 1986. Most of them used to operate within the Student Culture Houses and Youth Clubs, with young people involved.

After 1975, the most prominent Romanian SF clubs were HELION in Timisoara (1980), QUASAR in Iasi (1979), ANTARES in Brasov (1981), CRONOS in Târgoviste (1975), currents, especially cyberspace/cyberpunk. The most prominent publications printed after 2008 were ANTICIPATIA, HELION, GALILEO, and FICTIUNI. There have also been a number of electronic publications coming out.

The 1994 Eurocon, organized in Timisoara, was considered one of the best to date according to many statements. The main organizer of this event was HELION SF club. Another Eurocon, on a smaller scale, was organized in Romania in 2001 on Capidava, an island on the Danube, but from 2004 to 2012 there were no national Romanian conventions.

Starting in 2012, ARCA SF, a national society of SF clubs in Romania, under its president Mircea Oprea, began organizing a Romanian national convention again. The Romanian National Conventions (ROMCON), have reached the 38th edition. In 2016 ROMCON took place in Bucharest, and in 2017 it will take place on 1-3 September in Râmnicu-Vâlcea.

Other important events in Romanian fandom's calendar are: Helion National Short Prose Contest (now on its

FANDOM IN SPAIN

In a country where science fiction, fantasy and horror are traditionally considered minor literary genres, Spanish fandom is bursting out in recent years, just like the birth pod in Alien. The country's Association of Science Fiction, Fantasy and Horror (AEFCFT) organizes its conference every year, the Hispacon, and the Ignottus Awards (Spain's Hugos), in which the best of the national and international production in different categories is recognized. Last year's winners were authors Guillem López, César Mallorquí and Sergio Mars, among others. The association is also responsible for two anthologies: Visiones and Fabricantes de Sueños. The first collects short stories by debut writers, and the second presents a selection of some of the best stories published during the previous year. Local associations are very active as well, like TerBI (SF literary gathering de Bilbao), SCCFF (Catalan Society of SF & F), ACLFCFT (SF & F association in Castilla y León), or TerMal (SF literary gathering de Málaga). In 2016, Spain hosted EuroCon for the first time, having Aliette de Bodard, Richard Morgan, Andrzej Sapkowski, Johanna Sinisalo, Rosa Montero, Rhianna Pratchett, and Brandon Sanderson as guests.

Celsius Festival, a summer gathering of authors, publishing companies and fans in Avilés (Asturias), has acquired an extraordinary international dimension thanks to the endorsement of such names as G.R.R. Martin, among others. In 2017, it has announced the appearance of Joe Abercrombie, Ann Leckie, Joe Hill, Ian Whates, Mike Carey, Ian Watson, and Ian McDonald. In this setting, Guillem López and Laura Gallego were the Spanish writers honored by the Kelvin Award, created in 2016 to celebrate national and international authors via a jury composed by bloggers, critics, and fans. The Celsius Award – not to be confused with the festival – celebrates the best science fiction, fantasy or horror work of the previous year at the Semana Negra Literary Festival in Gijón (Asturias) and was presented to Eduardo Vaquerizo in 2016.

A BRIEF MODERN HISTORY OF SWEDISH FANDOM

Swedish science fiction fandom as we know it started in the early 1950s – some would say late 40s – with a number of local science fiction clubs. We got our first fanzines. The first convention was held in Lund in 1956. Swedish fandom varied in size throughout the years – shrunk in the mid-60s, grew again. Scancon 76 in Stockholm had almost 500 members and the early 80s saw a truly staggering fanzine production. Fighting and feuds in the mid-80s drove away many fans from Swedish fandom and the activity diminished. In the 90s, science fiction literature was largely invisible in Sweden, instead, fantasy conquered the bookstores and took over.

The fanzines gradually disappeared in the 90s and 00s, replaced by a number of very active mailing lists. These, in turn, gave way to blogs and Facebook, and later to Facebook, Twitter and the occasional podcast. Swedish fandom turned more of its focus towards conventions.

Convention fandom in Sweden was revitalised in the last decade. Kontext, held in Uppsala 2008, started a tradition of having free memberships for anyone under the age of 26. Other Swedish conventions have largely followed suit. In 2011, Eurocon in Stockholm – the defining moment in the modern history of Swedish fandom – became the by far largest literary science fiction convention in Swedish history, and so new generations found their way to fandom. New local groups were started. Local Swedish fan activity in the 00s was largely concentrated to the cities of Uppsala, Stockholm, Gothenburg and Linköping; now there are also meetings in Malmö, Lund and Västerås, and to some degree in Umeå and Gävle. Today, conventions, pub meetings and Facebook group discussions are at the core of Swedish fan activity.

FANDOM IN UKRAINE

Ukrainian fandom is mostly Russian-speaking, although a small number of fans use both Russian and Ukrainian. Moreover there is a Ukrainian-speaking literary community, "Zoryana Fortezya" (Star Fortress). Recently, the percentage of SF and fantasy in Ukrainian (including translated into Ukrainian) has increased slightly, but the number of total new publications in Ukraine has declined. Most writers are still published in Russian. The most famous of Ukraine's SF&F authors are the spouses, M. and S. Dyachenko, who now live in Los Angeles. Also very well-known are the Kharkov co-authors, D. Gromov and O. Lodyzhensky, writing under the combined pen name H. L. Oldie.

Among the clubs of science fiction fans the oldest is the Kharkov (Contact), which has been operating continuously since 1984; the current chairs are G. Panchenko and

F. Chesko. Contact is a professional writers' club, at weekly meetings of which the works of members of the club are read and discussed. In Kiev there is "Portal" (chairman S. Paltsun, meetings occur once a month, which was founded in 2004.

Until recently, Ukraine had several science fiction conventions, including one of the largest in the world, Kharkov's "Star Bridge." But in recent years it has been difficult regularly hold conventions, although some significant ones held irregularly are ComicCon, a cosplay festival, and LiTerra Con, all based in Kiev.

The ongoing political situation between Ukraine and Russia has created deep divides in Ukrainian fandom. The Donetsk science fiction club "Strannik" (Wanderer) under chairmen F. Berezin and V. Rusanov, was founded in 2010. Until 2014 there was regularly updated webpage <http://hrapypris31.livejournal.com>. And while updates have stopped, the club's meetings continue, although, its members' literary activities are no longer in connection with Ukraine. Crimean conventions, the largest of which is "Ayu-Dag Constellation" now operate separately from Ukrainian fandom as well.

Nine Worlds Convention.

Website: nineworlds.co.uk

FANDOM IN THE UK

UK genre fandom's sense of community has increased exponentially since the turn of the century. As well as traditionally beloved conventions like Eastercon and Fantasycon, more recent shows like Nine Worlds have taken their position as a vital part of the calendar. Nine Worlds, which prides itself on both its inclusivity and tech savvy, is a perfect example of how the focus of UK fandom has begun to expand and be more inclusive. The show's willingness to work as a framework within which multiple strands of fandom can be discussed remains a highlight of the convention year. Plus the Eurovision panel is AMAZING.

Outside the convention circuit, UK fandom is the combination of organized formal groups and enthusiastic informal ones you'd expect. The British Science Fiction Association (BSFA) and British Fantasy Society (BFS) have taken great steps forward in the last few years to maintain their established base but reach out to newcomers and become more inclusive. That's especially true of the BFS, whose annual Fantasycon convention is beginning to work as a petri dish of discussion in a similar way to Nine Worlds.

For all that, formal events do still struggle to escape the gravitational pull of London although even that has begun to change recently. Super Relaxed Fantasy Club, a discussion group for fans, editors, agents and authors meets in London but has the York Pub Meet satellite event as well as SFSF in Sheffield. Likewise, web and podcast communities like Geek Syndicate and Geek Planet Online function as blogs, news aggregators, magazines and community hubs as do sites like SciFi Bulletin and MyM Buzz, the latter of which is run by MCM who also run conventions across the country. There's also a busy indie press community embodied in companies like FoxSpirit and NewCon and an intensely creative indie film industry, with Redshirt Films being a particular standout.

Always changing, always questioning itself and increasingly motivated to grow and expand its perspectives, UK fandom is industrious, engaged and enthusiastic. Yes, most of us have pretty strong opinions on Doctor Who, and yes, most of us make a pretty great cup of tea, but that's just the beginning.

Especially as there's (usually) cake too.

UNITED STATES

TIMELINE OF SPECULATIVE FICTION FANDOM IN THE UNITED STATES

1926: Hugo Gernsback publishes Amazing Stories, the first SF magazine.

June 1928: The Eastbay Scientific Correspondence Club (ESCC), possibly the earliest SF fan club, is formed, with members who exchange letters with each other as well as meeting periodically for events and outings.

December 1929: The New York City fan club The Scienceers is formed, and is possibly the first SF club to have monthly meetings.

January 1930: The SF magazine Astounding Stories of Super-Science is published; in 1960 it becomes Analog Science Fiction and Fact.

May 1930: The Comet (later called Cosmology), edited by Raymond Arthur Palmer and published by the Science Correspondence Club, is the first fan-created magazine (later known as a fanzine).

1932: The Time Traveller, a fan magazine created by The Scienceers, is the first fanzine devoted exclusively to SF.

1934: Gernsback forms the Science Fiction League, another early SF fan club which eventually had chapters in various cities in the U.S., the UK, and Australia. Two original SFL chapters are still meeting today: the Los Angeles Science Fantasy Society (although it seceded from the SFL in the late 30s) and the Philadelphia SF Society (which had a hiatus during WWII, but resumed meeting before the war ended).

1936: The first SF convention is held in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

1937: The Fantasy Amateur Press Association (FAPA), the first science fiction APA, is formed by a group of science fiction fans.

October 1937: John W. Campbell takes over as editor of Astounding Science Fiction until his death in 1971. Campbell has a strong influence on the genre and is the first to publish stories by Isaac Asimov and Robert A. Heinlein.

September 1938: The Greater New York Science Fiction Club splits, forming two new fan clubs: the Futurians and the Queens Science Fiction Club.

July 1939: The first Worldcon (Nycon) is held in New York City, chaired by Sam Moskowitz and the Queens Science Fiction Club, who are mainly interested in talking about science fiction works and meeting authors and getting their autographs. The Futurians, who are chaired by Donald A. Wollheim (the later founder of DAW Books), and are more interested in relating science fiction to the real world and politics, show up with pamphlets promoting their agenda and get banned from the con. With the exceptions of the World War II years 1942–1945, Worldcon has been held every year since then.

July 1939: Myrtle R. Douglas ("Morojo") creates futuristic costumes worn at Nycon by herself and Forrest J Ackerman, the first occurrence of what later became known as SF cosplay.

Prior to July 4, 1939: Participants in SF fanac (fan activities) during this timespan are considered members of "First Fandom".

October 1940: Russ Chauvenet coins the term "fanzine".

April 1941: The National Fantasy Fan Federation (N3F or NFFF), one of the world's oldest science fiction fandom organizations, is founded.

1944: Fancyclopedia I, a collection of articles and definitions relating to SF fandom, is published by Jack Speer.

1950s: Although fans had been making up songs with science-fictional lyrics since the 1930s, a typographical error by Lee Jacobs in the title of his manuscript "The Influence of Science Fiction on Modern American Filk Music", intended for distribution in a mailing of the Spectator Amateur Press Society, resulted in the coining of the term "filk" for fannish songs and singing.

1953: The first Hugo Awards are presented at the 11th Worldcon (Philcon II) by the World Science Fiction Society (WSFS), an unincorporated entity comprised of the membership of the current year's Worldcon. With the exception of 1954, the Hugo Awards have been presented at every Worldcon since then.

February 1954: Variety magazine, in the earliest documented usage of the term "sci-fi", describes a TV show as "a rewarding change of pace from the more thunderous sci-fi and spaceship packages".

1955: The Hugo Award for Best Fanzine is established.

1963: The First Fandom Hall of Fame Award, for contributions to the field of science fiction dating back more than 30 years, is established.

1965: The Science Fiction and Fantasy Writers of America (SFWA), a professional association, is founded by Damon Knight.

1966: The first Nebula Awards are given by SFWA.

1967: The Hugo Awards for Best Fan Writer and Best Fan Artist are established.

1975: The first World Fantasy Convention is held in Providence, Rhode Island. The World Fantasy Awards are presented here for the first time.

1975: The first documented usage of the term "fanfic" appears in Star Trek Lives! by Joan Winston, Jacqueline Lichtenberg, Sondra Marshak, and Myrna Culbreath.

1976: Autoclave, the first fanzine-only annual convention is held in Detroit.

1976: Editor Frederik Pohl at Bantam Books publishes the earliest known mainstream publication of fanfic, Star Trek: The New Voyages, an anthology edited by Sondra Marshak and Myrna Culbreath. A second volume is published in 1978, but further announced volumes did not eventuate, perhaps in part due to the significant controversy in fandom caused by several of the stories being altered without consultation with the authors.

1979: FilkCon, the first convention devoted to filking, is held near Chicago, Illinois.

1983: The first dedicated costuming convention, Costume-Con, is held in San Diego, California.

1983: FAANS, a fan fiction video, is produced and directed by Larry Tucker, with a script co-written by Randy Bathurst. It features an all-star fan cast, and parodies the movie Jaws with an Ominous Propeller Beanie which menaces the attendees at a con.

1984: The Hugo Award for Best Semiprozine is established to recognize professional-quality fan magazines which are devoted to SF news, criticism of science fiction and fantasy works, and/or original short fiction.

1984: Corflu, the longest-running fanzine convention in the U.S., is held for the first time in Berkeley, California.

1985: The Greater Columbia Fantasy Costumer's Guild, now known as the International Costumers' Guild (ICG), is formed to bring together hobbyist and professional costumers from around the world, and to foster local educational and social costume events.

1988: The first LGBT-focused speculative fiction convention, Gaylaxicon, is held in Provincetown, Massachusetts.

1989: After several years of special-interest parties for furies (fans who enjoy costuming as anthropomorphic animals) held at science fiction conventions, the first furry convention, ConFurence Zero, takes place in Costa Mesa, California.

1994: The FANAC Fan History Project, devoted to the preservation and distribution of information about science fiction and science fiction fandom, is created.

1996: The Retro Hugos, retroactive Hugo Awards established for works which would have been eligible in years during which no Hugo Awards are given, are awarded for the first time by the WSFS.

1996: WSFS.org and Worldcon.org, the websites of The World Science Fiction Society and its Worldcons, are established.

1996: Fanac.org, the website of The FANAC Fan History Project, is created.

2000: eFanzines.com, a repository and free distribution point for fanzines, which also contains many historical copies of fanzines, is created.

2006: ZineWiki.com, an open-source encyclopedia devoted to zines and independent media, which covers the history, production, distribution, and culture of the small press, is created.

2007: WSFS creates TheHugoAwards.org, the official website of the Hugo Awards.

2008: Archive of Our Own (AO3), a non-profit open-source repository for fan-written fiction (fanfic) contributed by users, is created by the Organization for Transformative Works (OTW).

2008: Fanlore.org, an open-source encyclopedia devoted to the history and current state of fan works, fan activities, and fan terminology is created by the OTW.

December 2008: Well-known SF fan Forrest J Ackerman passes away; many of the 400,000+ SF memorabilia items stored in the 18-room Ackermansion museum are passed on to the Science Fiction Museum and Hall of Fame in Seattle, Washington.

2010: Fancyclopedia 3 (fancyclopedia.wikidot.com) is created by The FANAC Fan History Project, containing articles about all aspects of SF fandom: people, places, things, events, honors and awards, conventions, slogans, clubs, etc.

2016: The FANAC Fan History Project establishes a YouTube Channel (youtube.com/c/FanacFanhistory) for video and audio recordings of convention speeches and panels, masquerades and costume contests, and other fandom events.

2017: Archive of Our Own currently hosts over three million fan-written works in over 24,600 fandoms.

SOUTHERN FANDOM

Organised fandom on the Central Gulf Coast in the U.S. goes back at least to 1950 when the first New Orleans Worldcon, NOLACon I, was being planned for 1951. Currently, there are a variety of fannish social organizations in our region.

Krewe du Who, the Doctor Who fan club centered in New Orleans, began as a unit (called a sub-krewe in the local lingo) of the Intergalactic Krewe of Chewbacchus, a sci-fi and fantasy themed Mardi Gras parade. They host viewing parties at Crown and Anchor pub, among other parties and outings. In conjunction with local Mad Science rock band The Consortium of Genius (The COG), they run Timefest, which just finished its fifth edition this June.

Speaking of The COG, fronted by Dr Milo T. Pinkerton (mundanely known as Lewis D'Aubin), they have been our premier nerd rock band for about 25 years. They gave birth a few years back to "hypno-jazz" band The New Orleans Steamcog Orchestra. Other fannish rock bands currently active here include Tomb of Nick Cage, The Browncoat Brass, The Futureonauts, and Darwin Prophet.

Area 504, which was founded in 1996 as a Babylon 5 fan club called Babylon 504, is the club I'm active with, having been its Captain for about 17 years now. We have monthly meetings/parties, throw room parties at cons, and go on a variety of social expeditions. Some of our members were key in founding CONtraflow and continue to work for the con now in its 7th year.

Star Trek fandom in our area is represented by Krewe of the Enterprise, a home-grown club founded in 1986, and by several Starfleet International chapters. The USS Corsair in Baton Rouge was followed by the USS New Orleans in, of course, New Orleans and the USS Neptune in Biloxi. The USS New Orleans will be hosting this year's Starfleet International conference.

Stars Wars fandom is chiefly represented by chapters of the 501st Legion; in Louisiana, the Bast Alpha Garrison, and, in Mississippi, the Rancor Raiders.

NOTES ON THE LONG LIST OF WORLDCONS

GENERAL NOTES

These notes have been carefully researched by the WSFS Long List Committee. If you choose to publish them, please do not edit them in any way.

NUMBER – YEAR – NAME

We have normally listed a convention by the least confusing version of its name. Most of the time this is the name preferred by the convention (variants are noted) but we also follow fannish tradition in retroactively numbering the first Worldcon in a series 1 (or I or One). (For example, Noreascon 1 was known at the time only as “Noreascon”.) All known naming oddities are noted.

GUESTS

Custom in designating Guests of Honor has varied greatly, with some conventions giving specific titles (Fan, Pro, Australia, US, Artist, etc.) and some simply calling them all Guests of Honor. We have used specific labels where they existed. In general we do not note spelling issues like Honor/Honour.

The Toastmaster is not a Guest of Honor, although some conventions gave the Toastmaster equal billing with the Guests. To confuse matters further, in at least one case a Guest was also designated as Toastmaster. In a few instances the Toastmaster was given a title other than “Toastmaster” such as “Master of Ceremonies”. All toastmasters and MCs we are aware of are listed in the notes.

We have tried to note all cases where a guest did not attend.

SITE

Under Site we have listed:

- All facilities which hosted non-trivial convention functions
- The main sleeping room hotel
- Any other hotel which accounted for 25% or more of the sleeping rooms.

CHAIRMAN

Who chaired a particular Worldcon is sometimes less clear than one might expect. Our policy in constructing this list is to be as accurate as possible without being misleading. We have attempted to follow the convention's official record (where it exists) supplemented by other contemporary records. In all cases where we are aware of ambiguity, we have included notes. When multiple people with Chairman-like titles exist (including Co-Chairman, Deputy Chairman, Associate Chairman, Vice-Chairman, and Deputy Assistant Co-Vice Chairman) we list only the actual top manager at the time of the convention in the main list, and all other people who were in line management positions with titles including the word fragment “chair” in the notes (i.e., all line managers with titles matching [C]hair). When the title is co-Chairman and it appears that both were functional top managers, both are included in the Long List. People in support positions (non-line management positions) with Chair-like titles (e.g., “Chairman’s Staff” or “Assistant to the Chairman”) are not listed. This list does not include bid leadership – only leadership after the bid was won. Where we found ambiguity, we have documented it.

Additionally, we have attempted to document cases where there was a disconnect between the person holding the title of Chairman and the person(s) who were the actual top manager(s) of the convention.

ATTENDANCE

Where available, this column records two numbers: how many paying members actually attended the Worldcon and how many total members there were.

The Attendance total includes all paid admissions including one-day admissions. (One-day admissions are usually not members of WSFS, and technically not members of the convention, but we do count them for the purpose of computing total attendance. A one-day admission counts as one attendee.) It excludes freebies who did not participate in the convention (e.g., contractors), unpaid children, paid attending members who did not attend, and all supporting members, but it does include free memberships given to people who did participate in the convention (e.g. guests of honor).

Total members includes everyone who paid for a membership or admission whether full attending, one-day, child, or supporting, plus the Guests of Honor and other free memberships given to people participating in the convention. It does not include freebies who did not participate in the convention (like contractors).

CONVENTION NOTES

1939 – NYCON I

The 1939 Worldcon did not have a name, but simply called itself “World Science Fiction Convention”. It has subsequently been called “Nycon I” and “The 1939 Worldcon”.

The convention was controlled by a so-called ‘Ruling Triumvirate’ whose other members were William S. Sykora and James V. Taurasi.

1940 – CHICON I

Chicon I was run by a triumvirate. Mark Reinsberg held the title of chairman, with Erle Korshak (secretary) and Bob Tucker (treasurer) as equal partners. Korshak presided over the opening day of the con, when Reinsberg fell ill.

1947 – PHILCON I

L. Jerome Stanton was Toastmaster.

1949 – CINVENTION

Don Ford carried out the duties of Chairman, but was officially Secretary-Treasurer; Charles R. Tanner had the honorary title of Chairman.

Ted Carnell, the Fan Guest of Honor, was also Toastmaster with the title “Entertainment Master of Ceremonies.” He was brought to North America by the Big Pond Fund.

1950 – NORWESCON

Donald Day replaced Jack de Courcy as Chairman after the latter’s resignation.

Theodore Sturgeon was the toastmaster and had the title “Entertainment Master of Ceremonies.”

The available data is very incomplete and imprecise and many of these numbers are probably substantially in error. We have noted cases where we know the numbers to be doubtful. About 99% of the numbers ending in 00 are estimates. The numbers are of the form aaaa/mmmm, where the first number is the attendance and the second the membership. When only one is known, the other is left blank (e.g., /2345 means an unknown attendance and 2345 total members). When only a single number is presented, we don’t know whether it is attendance or total members, though, historically, it seems most often to be attendance.

1952 – TASFIC

“TASFic” stood for “Tenth Anniversary Science Fiction Convention”; it was popularly known as Chicon II, and subsequent Chicons counted it as such.

This was by far the largest Worldcon to date. The membership numbers are confused due to a there being a reported 175 or so “ghosts” (people who came in without paying). The figure of 870 paid attending members seems to be accurate; with ghosts there would be perhaps 1050 people at the convention. The 300 number for Supporting Members is also probably pretty accurate, as it is based on several fairly contemporary reports.

1953 – 11TH WORLDCON

Officially known as “The 11th Worldcon,” it was popularly known as Philcon II. Milton A. Rothman replaced James A. Williams as Chairman upon Williams’ death. Tom Claeson, PhD was Vice-Chairman.

Isaac Asimov was Toastmaster.

1954 – SFCON

Though SFCon and Westercon shared the hotel and con chairs, Westercon was held on Friday, September 3, with Jack Williamson as GoH, while Worldcon was held Saturday-Monday September 4–6, with John W. Campbell, Jr., as GoH.

Robert Bloch was Toastmaster.

1955 – CLEVENTION

The identity of the Special Mystery Guest was not revealed (even to the honoree) until the first night of the convention. The Program book noted that “Mr. Boucher [the Toastmaster] will make the presentation dcin2021.org

Washington, DC fandom has played host to many science fiction and fantasy conventions, including Disclave, Capclave, and two Worldcons — Discon I (1963) and Discon II (1974).

A new generation of DC area fans are bidding to bring the 79th Worldcon to Washington, DC in August 2021 at the Marriott Wardman Park in the Woodley Park neighborhood of Northwest Washington. The hotel is surrounded by a vibrant strip of restaurants and shops, Rock Creek Park, the Smithsonian National Zoo, and a Metrorail subway station. It is also near the Dupont Circle and Adams Morgan neighborhoods with a wealth of restaurants, shops, and historical sites.

We are a committee of the Baltimore-Washington Area Worldcon Association ("BWAWA") a 501(c)(3) organization dedicated to fannish activities in the greater Baltimore-Washington Metropolitan Area. More information on BWAWA can be found at bwawa.org.

of the Achievement Awards and identify the Mystery Guest."

Anthony Boucher was Toastmaster.

1956 – NYCON II

Officially known as "NEWYORCON" but – in the words of a report at the time "The fans wouldn't have it" – and it has been NYCon II since.

Robert Bloch was Toastmaster.

1957 – LONCON I

The Loncon program book does not use the name "Loncon" but refers to the convention as the "15th World Science Fiction Convention."

1958 – SOLACON

Combined with the West Coast Science Fantasy Conference (Westercon), sharing Guests of Honor and Chairmen. Solacon was physically in Los Angeles, but (by mayoral proclamation) technically in South Gate, California, to fulfill their bid slogan of "South Gate in 58".

Anthony Boucher was Toastmaster.

1959 – DETENTION

John Berry, the Fan GoH, was brought to North America by a special fan fund.

Isaac Asimov had been listed as the Toastmaster in all promotional material prior to the convention. At the convention the program book added "...with the assistance of Robert Bloch" who acted as Asimov's foil at the banquet.

1960 – PITTCON

Ray Smith was Vice Chairman. The Program Book lists a "non-con program" day on Friday, 2 September.

Isaac Asimov was Toastmaster.

1961 – SEACON

Harlan Ellison was Toastmaster.

1962 – CHICON III

Wilson Tucker was Toastmaster.

For a long time the stated attendance figure was 550 members, but this seems to have been the result of a series of ancient typos when setting successive program books. The convention proceedings and other contemporary documentation supports 730 members at the con and 830 members overall.

1963 – DISCON I

Isaac Asimov was Toastmaster.

1964 – PACIFICON II

Combined with the West Coast Science Fantasy Conference (Westercon), sharing Guests of Honor and Chairmen. Pacificon II was held in Oakland, CA, which was not the same city (LA, 1946) where Pacificon I was held.

Anthony Boucher was Toastmaster.

1965 – LONCON II

Tom Boardman was Toastmaster.

1966 – TRICON

Officially jointly hosted by Cleveland, Detroit, and Cincinnati (hence “Tricon”). The question of who chaired the convention is complicated. The Tricon program book lists Cleveland’s Ben Jason as Chairman and Detroit’s Howard DeVore and Cincinnati’s Lou Tabakow as Associate Chairmen, but included all three in the Long List as did NyCon 3 the following year. People involved with the convention confirm that it was run by the three of them working jointly, so they are being treated as co-Chairmen here.

Isaac Asimov was Toastmaster.

1967 – NYCON 3

The convention’s name was written as “NyCon 3” at the convention, but – somehow – subsequently got changed to Nycon III in versions of the Long List, perhaps echoing NYCon II.

Harlan Ellison was Toastmaster.

1968 – BAYCON

Combined with the West Coast Science Fantasy Conference (Westercon), sharing Guests of Honor and Chairmen.

Robert Silverberg was Toastmaster.

The long-used 1430 attendance figure seems to be a mid-range estimate derived from the Baycon Post-Con Report’s “total registered attendance just short of 1300...with 2–300 non-registered walk-ins at various times.”

1969 – ST. LOUISCON

Eddie Jones, the TAFF (Trans Atlantic Fan Fund) winner, replaced Ted White, who withdrew as Fan Guest to dramatize the TAFF winner.

Harlan Ellison was Toastmaster.

1970 – HEICON

Heicon had decided prior to the convention to select the TAFF winner as its Fan Guest. The subsequent winner of the 1970 TAFF election was Elliot Shorter.

Heicon also called itself “Heicon ’70 International”.

John Brunner was Toastmaster.

1971 – NOREASCON I

Robert Silverberg was Toastmaster.

1972 – L.A.CON I

Robert Bloch was Toastmaster.

1973 – TORCON II

Lester del Rey was Toastmaster.

1974 – DISCON II

Jay and Alice Haldeman were co-Chairmen until the spring of 1974 when circumstances forced them to move out of Washington. Ron Bounds took over as de facto Chairman until Jay returned for the convention. At the convention, Jay and Ron functioned as co-chairmen. The Discon II program book continued to list Jay and Alice as co-Chairmen, and included a welcome from Jay (co-Chairman) and Ron (vice-Chairman).

Andrew J. Offutt was Toastmaster.

1975 – AUSSIECON ONE

Fan Guest of Honor Donald Tuck did not attend the convention. (Fans had to go to his home in Tasmania to meet him.)

John Bangsund was Toastmaster.

1976 – MIDAMERICON

The membership totals are from chairman Ken Keller who reports that the numbers announced during the convention were grossly wrong because one of the C&VB’s loaned registrars did not turn in her records until afterwards. The previous Long List number of 2800 was an estimate made by a later compiler from the faulty at-con numbers.

Wilson Tucker was Toastmaster.

1977 – SUNCON

SunCon was bid by “7 in ’77”, a group of well-known con-runners who announced their bid while still searching for an ideal site. They selected a Sheraton hotel in Orlando, Florida, which went bankrupt a few months after the bid was selected. The hotel forced a renegotiation of the convention's contract and SunCon wound up moving to the Fontainebleau Hotel in Miami Beach.

According to Chairman Don Lundry, his wife Grace Lundry functioned as his co-Chairman; however, convention publications listed Don solely.

In 2003 Don Lundry provided a revised attendance figure of 3240, replacing the number of 2500 reported in publications at the time and subsequently in previous versions of this list. It is possible that this is total membership and not attendance.

Robert Silverberg was Toastmaster.

1978 – IGUANACON II

This was the first IguanaCon, but was called IguanaCon II because of a previous hoax.

Greg Brown was the initial Chairman but was later replaced by Tim Kyger. After the convention, Gary Farber was recognized as having fulfilled the function of Vice-Chairman.

Josef Nesvadba was announced as the European GoH for IguanaCon. He could not get travel papers and did not attend. He was not listed as a guest in PR3. In the program book he was listed on the main GoH page, but was not listed in IguanaCon's own entry in the Long List. Finally, he was not listed in IguanaCon's PR 5, which came out in 1980 and provided a detailed history of what went on, who resigned and who replaced who.

F. M. Busby was Toastmaster.

1979 – SEACON 79

Seacon 79 was held in Brighton, England, which was not the same city (Seattle, 1961) where Seacon I was held.

Bob Shaw was Toastmaster.

1980 – NOREASCON TWO

Robert Silverberg was Toastmaster.

1981 – DENVENTION TWO

Ed Bryant was Toastmaster.

1982 – CHICON IV

Larry Smith and Bob Hillis were vice-Chairmen. Marta Randall was Toastmaster.

1983 – CONSTELLATION

Jack L. Chalker was Toastmaster.

1984 – LACON II

Like South Gate, Anaheim is part of the greater Los Angeles area.

The Toastmaster and MC positions were essentially equivalent, with Robert Bloch (Toastmaster) officiating at the Hugo Ceremony and Jerry Pournelle (Master of Ceremonies) at the Guest of Honor Speeches and Other Awards Ceremony.

This was the largest Worldcon to date.

1985 – AUSSIECON II

David Grigg replaced John Foyster, who resigned for family reasons, as Chairman.

1986 – CONFEDERATION

Bob Shaw was Toastmaster.

1987 – CONSPIRACY

Alfred Bester did not attend the convention due to poor health.

Malcolm Edwards was Chairman until about nine months before the convention when he resigned from the committee for personal reasons. To minimize possible bad publicity from this, he agreed to remain as titular Chairman and presided at some at-con ceremonies. Paul Oldroyd took over all of his duties, but under the title of "Coordinator". Both Malcolm and Paul agree that that Paul was the de facto Chairman at the time of the convention.

Brian W. Aldiss was Toastmaster.

1988 – NOLACON II

Mike Resnick was Toastmaster.

1989 – NOREASCON 3

The Stranger Club was the first SF club in Boston and sponsor of the pre-War series of Boskones and the club was the Fan Guest of Honor of Noreascon 3. All of its known surviving members were invited to the convention as guests to represent the club and seven were located and attended: Art Widner, Chan Davis, Harry Stubbs (Hal Clement), Louis Russell Chauvenet, Timothy Orrok, Norman Stanley, and Robert D. Swisher.

The convention's name was officially agnostic: "Noreascon 3", "Noreascon Three" and "Noreascon III" were all declared correct forms of the name.

1990 – CONFICTION

Chelsea Quinn Yarbro was Toastmaster.

1991 – CHICON V

Marta Randall was Toastmaster.

1992 – MAGICON

Becky Thomson was Co-Chairman for the first two years after the site was selected, then Vice-Chairman thereafter and at the convention.

Spider Robinson was Toastmaster, but Mike Resnick acted as Toastmaster for the Meet-the-Pros party.

1993 – CONFRANCISCO

David Clark replaced Terry Biffel as Chairman upon Biffel's death. Besides the Chairman, there were Vice Chairs: Peggy Rae Pavlat (Sapienza) and Ruth L. Sachter; and Deputy Vice Chairs: Jeff Canfield and Judy Kindell.

The Guests of Honor were designated as "Honored Guests" and the Toastmaster, Guy Gavriel Kay, was called the "Master of Ceremonies". Mark Twain was "channeled" by Jon deCles.

1994 – CONADIAN

The Canadian National Science Fiction Convention (Canvention) was held 'in conjunction' with ConAdian – with separate membership and mostly separate facilities.

Christine Barnson and Kevin Standlee were Deputy Chairs.

Barry B. Longyear was Toastmaster.

1995 – INTERSECTION

Intersection was also the 1995 Eurocon.

When Intersection won, Tim Illingworth and Vincent Docherty were Co-Chairmen. Docherty moved to Oman, resigned and was replaced by Martin Easterbrook. Illingworth subsequently resigned and was replaced by Docherty. Easterbrook and Docherty were Co-Chairmen during the last 18 months of planning and at the convention.

T.R. Smith was Vice-Chairman. Margaret Austin and Oliver Grüter-Andrew were Deputy Chairs.

Diane Duane and Peter Morwood were Toastmasters.

1996 – LACON III

Special Guest Elsie Wollheim died before the convention.

Connie Willis was Toastmaster.

1997 – LONESTARCON II

a.k.a. "The Second Occasional LoneStarCon Science Fiction Convention & Chili Cook-off"; the first LoneStarCon, held in Austin, was the 1985 NASFiC.

Neal Barrett, Jr. was Toastmaster.

1998 – BUCCONEER

Special Guest J. Michael Straczynski did not attend.

Charles Sheffield was Toastmaster.

1999 – AUSSIECON THREE

GoH George Turner died prior to the convention. Special Guest J. Michael Straczynski attended.

2000 – CHICON 2000

Mike Jencevice and Becky Thomson were associate Chairmen.

Harry Turtledove was Toastmaster.

2001 – THE MILLENNIUM PHILCON

Laura Syms and Gary Feldbaum were Vice-Chairmen.

Esther Friesner was Toastmaster.

2002 – CONJOSÉ

After the bid won, Tom Whitmore was appointed Chairman with Ruth Sachter as Vice-Chairman. Sachter resigned and subsequently Craig Howlett and Cindy Scott were appointed Vice-Chairmen. Finally, Kevin Standlee was appointed Co-Chairman with Whitmore.

Tad Williams was Toastmaster.

2003 – TORCON 3

Combined with the Canadian National Science Fiction Convention (Canvention).

Artist GoH Frank Kelly Freas did not attend.

Spider Robinson was Toastmaster.

2005 – INTERACTION

The Guests of Honour were listed with no designation as to type.

Interaction was also the 2005 Eurocon.

Initially Vince Docherty was Chairman with Colin Harris and Paul Treadaway as Vice Chairmen. Subsequently, Harris moved to Co-Chairman, and Treadaway moved to Deputy Chairman.

KIM Campbell was Board convenor of Interaction until her death in November 2003. (The Board had designated the convenor position as a Convention Co-Chair.)

GoH Robert Sheckley was unable to attend the convention.

2006 – L.A.CON IV

Bobbi Armbruster and Craig Miller were Vice-Chairmen.

Fan GoH Howard DeVore and Special Guest Frankie Thomas both died before the convention.

2008 – DENVENTION 3

Wil McCarthy was Toastmaster.

2009 – ANTICIPATION

Ralph Bakshi was originally announced as Artist GoH but withdrew for health reasons.

Julie Czerneda was Master of Ceremonies.

2011 – RENOVATION

The Guests of Honor were listed with no designation as to type.

GoH Charles N. Brown died before the convention.

Renovation also had Special Guests Tricky Pixie (musicians) and Bill Willingham (a comics writer).

2012 – CHICON 7

John Scalzi was Toastmaster.

Artist GoH Rowena Morrill did not attend.

Bobbi Armbruster, Helen Montgomery, and Steven H Silver were Vice-Chairmen

2013 – LONESTARCON 3

The Guests of Honor were listed with no designation as to type.

Paul Cornell was Toastmaster.

Leslie Fish and Joe R. Lansdale were special guests.

Initially Laura Domitz and Bill Parker were Co-Chairmen. Randall Shepherd later was appointed Vice-Chairman. In March, 2013, Shepherd swapped jobs with Domitz and Parker.

Guest of Honor Darrell Sweet died before the convention.

2014 – LONCON 3

GoH Iain M. Banks died before the convention.

2015 – SASQUAN

The Guests of Honor were listed with no designation as to type.

Initially, Sally Woehrle and Bobbie DuFault were Co-Chairmen, but DuFault died a two weeks after the bid was won.

The Vice-Chairmen were Glenn Glazer, Pierre Pettinger and Mike Willmoth.

2016 – MIDAMERICON II

The Guests of Honor were listed with no designation as to type.

Pat Cadigan was Toastmaster

Initially Diane Lacey, Ruth Lichtwardt, and Jeff Orth were Co-Chairmen. In February 2016, Lichtwardt became sole Chairman and Lacey was appointed Vice-Chairman.

2017 – WORLDCON 75

Ian Stewart was Science Guest, Kjell N. Lindgren was Special Guest, and Karen Lord was Toastmaster

Initially Jukka Halme, Saija Aro, and Crystal Huff were Co-Chairmen. Aro resigned in May 2016 and Huff resigned in November 2016, leaving Halme as sole chairman. Karo Leikomaa and Colette H. Fozard were named Vice-Chairmen.

2018 – WORLDCON 76

Bob Wilkins and Edgar Pangborn were dead when selected and were designated "Ghost of Honor."

OCTOBER

The Formics have been defeated and the spoils of war claimed, including hundreds of terraformed worlds ripe for colonization. But the new leaders of these colonies must be trained, preferably from childhood, a mission that the Fleet School, housed in the old Battle School Station, is more than willing to pursue.

LONG LIST OF NASFICS – NOTES

GENERAL NOTES

GUESTS

Custom in designating Guests of Honor has varied greatly, with some conventions giving specific titles (Fan, Pro, Australia, US, Artist, etc.) and some simply calling them all Guests of Honor. We have used specific labels where they existed. In general we do not note spelling issues like Honor/Honour.

The Toastmaster is not a Guest of Honor, although some conventions gave the Toastmaster equal billing with the Guests. To confuse matters further, in at least one case a Guest was also designated as Toastmaster. In a few instances the Toastmaster was given a title other than “Toastmaster” such as “Master of Ceremonies”.

SITE

Under Site we have listed:

- All facilities which hosted non-trivial convention functions
- The main sleeping room hotel
- Any other hotel which accounted for 25% or more of the sleeping rooms.

CHAIRMAN

Who chaired a particular NASFiC is sometimes less clear than one might expect. Our policy in constructing this list is to be as accurate as possible without being misleading. We have attempted to follow the convention’s official record (where it exists) supplemented by other contemporary records. In all cases where we are aware of ambiguity, we have included notes. When multiple people with Chairman-like titles exist (including Co-Chairman, Deputy Chairman, Associate Chairman, Vice-Chairman, and Deputy Assistant Co-Vice Chairman) we list only the top manager at the time of the convention in the main list, and all others in management positions with Chairman-like titles in the notes (i.e., all managers with titles matching [cC]hair.) People in support positions with Chair-like titles (e.g., “Chairman’s Staff” or “Assistant to the Chairman”) are not included. This list makes no attempt to include bid leadership.

ATTENDANCE

Where available, this column records two numbers: how many paying members actually attended the NASFiC and how many total members there were.

The Attendance total includes all paid admissions including one-day admissions. (A one-day admission counts as one attendee.) It excludes freebies who did not participate in the convention (e.g., contractors), unpaid children, paid attending members who did not attend, and all supporting members, but it does include free memberships given to people who did participate in the convention (e.g. Guests of Honor).

Total members includes everyone who paid for a membership or admission whether full attending, one-day, child, or supporting, plus the Guests of Honor and other free memberships given to people participating in the convention. It does not include freebies who did not participate in the convention.

The available data is very incomplete and imprecise and many of these numbers are probably substantially in error. We have noted cases where we know the numbers to be doubtful. About 99% of the numbers ending in 00 are estimates. The numbers are of the form aaaa/mmmm, where the first number is the attendance and the second the membership. When only one is known, the other is left blank (e.g., /2345 means an unknown attendance and 2345 total members). When only a single number is presented, we don't know whether it is attendance or total members.

CONVENTION NOTES

1975 – NASFiC

Spelled out, NASFiC was an acronym for North American Science Fiction Convention.

Lester del Rey was Toastmaster.

1979 – NORTHAMERICON '79

Another source estimates the attendance as 1400.

1985 – LONESTARCON I

Also known as “The First Occasional Lone Star Science Fiction Convention & Chili Cook-off” and “ChiliCon”. Robert Taylor was Vice-Chairman.

Chad Oliver was Toastmaster.

1987 – CACTUSCON

Julius Schwartz was Toastmaster.

1995 – DRAGON*CON

Also known as “NASFiC / Dragon*Con / Atlanta Comics Expo '95”. Dragon*Con was a pre-existing annual Atlanta convention, with an emphasis on the media aspects of science fiction.

Joe Haldeman was Master of Ceremonies.

2005 – CASCADIA CON

Cascadia Con at various times listed Harry Harrison as “Special Guest of Honor – Canceled”, Uffington Horse as “Friends of Filk * Filk Group Guest of Honor” and Hiroaki Inoue as “Anime Guest of Honor”.

2007 – ARCHON31/TUCKERCON

Media GoHs Kevin Murphy and Bill Corbett replaced Mira Furlan who was unable to attend.

Roger Tener was Toastmaster.

None of the fourteen hotels (including the main hotel) were large and evidently none of them meet the 25% of rooms criterion for listing, so only the official main hotel is listed.

2010 – RECONSTRUCTION

Toni Weisskopf was Toastmaster.

2014 – DETCON

As guests, Detcon also listed Nnedi Okorafor, YA Author Special Guest; Jon Davis, Video Game Special Guest; Roger Sims, ConChair Emeritus; Fred Prophet, ConChair Emeritus

THE LAST DAYS OF MAGIC

By Mark Tompkins

Irish Magic, Mystery, and Medieval Mayhem

Now In Paperback - From Penguin Books.

"The book does not suffer from any lack of plot or incident, nor of vivid, articulate writing...it's an honest, beautifully detailed book and an entertaining read."

—THE WASHINGTON POST

Named one of The Best New Books. "A fantastical treat."

—PEOPLE MAGAZINE

"The Last Days of Magic is intricate, bold and memorable long after you put it down. It succeeds in bringing magic and mythology to life and delivers a shimmer of optimism and the possibility that magic is not quite dead."

—NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

"The Last Days of Magic is everything I want in a historical fantasy, offering a tale that sparks the imagination and explores the multilayered relationship between truth and myth. A stunning, evocative debut."

—THE SPECULATIVE HERALD

"Tompkins' book is rich with detail, beautifully written, and presents a fascinating backdrop from which this story plays out."

—LIGHTSPEED MAGAZINE

"A heady brew of Celtic and Biblical mythology with late medieval political intrigue and warfare.... Tompkins combines deft characterization with treachery, battle, magic, and hints of Dan Brown."

—PUBLISHERS WEEKLY

"Highly recommended" 5 out of 5 stars

—SAN FRANCISCO REVIEW OF BOOKS

Available in hardcover, paperback, e-book, and audiobook.

Worldcon 75 also thanks the former staffers who helped us on our journey but were unable to continue their duties through to the convention. In particular, we thank former co-chairs Saija Aro and Crystal Huff for their contributions to Worldcon 75 before they resigned in 2016.

CONGRATULATIONS TO OUR

2017 HUGO FINALISTS

BEST NOVEL

“As hopeful as it is hilarious, and highly recommended.”
—The New York Times Book Review

“Wildly imaginative, really interesting.”
—PRESIDENT BARACK OBAMA,
The New York Times on
The Three-Body trilogy

“[A] brilliant job...keeping us in the close confidences of such a charming and deceitful narrator. The book seems like it burst onto the page fully formed.” —Wired

BEST RELATED WORK

“These essays are funny; they are poignant; they are powerful.”
—The New York Times Book Review

BEST EDITOR – LONG FORM

LIZ GORINSKY

DEVI PILLAI

MIRIAM WEINBERG

BEST SERIES

“Sharp, original, passionate—this series is everything I want urban fantasy to be.” —NPR

JOHN W. CAMPBELL MEMORIAL AWARD

ADA PALMER

“[An] awe-inspiring debut novel... It’s a genius kind of energy, and it’s infectious.”

—NPR on Toa Like the Lightning
