

ROBIN HOOD

BY JONATHAN
WILLIAM YOST

NOVEMBER 11, 1959 --- AGE 4 YEARS, 11 MONTHS. STENCILLED BY WILLIAM ROTSLER
AND PUBLISHED 1959 BY THE L.A.S.F.S. PRESS, LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.

It was one bright sunny morning when the King was hiding in a tree, knowing that Robin Hood was there. And Robin Hood knew that he was in the tree hiding from him. So Robin Hood shot an arrow in the tree at the King's face.

Which made the King very angry and he said "Grrrrr."

And then the King got very angry and decided to set a trap for Robin Hood. He got a robot, and just as Robin Hood was looking at the sun the robot sprung out of his hide-out and konked Robin Hood on the head and knocked Robin Hood out.

which made the King very grand and happy 'cause Robin Hood had "fell" on a highway.

Then Robin Hood wheeled his head
a little and then he was alive again.

Meanwhile, the King was thinking, "Maybe Robin Hood got his head run over by a car since he fell on the highway."

The King was very mad when he found out that Robin Hood was all right.

Then the King set another trap for Robin Hood. He got a box and drew the Princess on it that was Robin Hood's fair lady and put dynamite under it and lighted the fuse, to explode when Robin Hood got there.

The dynamite did just what the King wanted it to. It exploded right when Robin Hood was there.

Then the King saw the explosion but he didn't notice that Robin Hood's head was wiggling.

Meanwhile the Jester was holding Robin Hood's fair lady in the tower as prisoner.

Meanwhile, Robin Hood was all right and he wasn't killed.

And Robin Hood decided to disguise himself as a ghost to scare the King away from the Palace.

Then Robin Hood thought to himself "The King thinks that I'm killed by that explosion that went off, but if he thinks that, he's wrong," Robin Hood thought to himself.

Then Robin Hood thought to himself, "First before I scare the King with my ghost costumes I'll show the Princess, my fair lady, that I'm not a ghost, before I scare him."

After that, he pit on his ghost costume.

The King came in and said, "Well, fair lady Princess, I haven't seen Robin Hood in sight anywhere."

The King heard someone behind him say "Boo"...then he said "Heh heh heh...B-b-b-boo."

The King was so scared that he ran out of the Palace, as Robin Hood planned in his ghost costume to do.

Robin Hood was still a ghost, smiling and thinking they were safe.

Then the jester ran down, thinking the King was still there, but he wasn't there after all. So the Jester decided to go after Robin Hood himself.

Robin Hood thought the fair lady and himself were safe, then the jester came in and caught them, and Robin Hood saw his duty. He got an arrow and shot it at the jester, and they lived happily ever after.
