Love Tabletop Role-Playing Games?

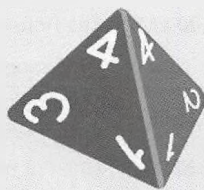

Our Tabletop Role-playing Games (RPGs) meetup usually takes place the last Saturday of the month from 1:00-5:00 PM at the BSFS Building, 3310 E. Baltimore

Street in Baltimore. We will be rotating through various tabletop Sci Fi RPGs. You are welcome if you love tabletop RPGs.

Never played an RPG before? You are most welcome. We will be running for all levels. We have a few experienced GMs, but are always looking for more. Premade characters will be available; we will run as many games as we have people for.

Check the calendar at www.bsfs.org/bsfscldr.htm.
Info: mike@bsfs.org.

Well-behaved children are welcome in most programs; exceptions are noted.

Friday Afternoon

- Fri 2:30 PM (1hr)
[5] Guilford
Panel
- Writing Neurodivergent Characters
Gwendolyn Clare, Craig Lurance Gidney, Stephanie "Flash" Burke, Meg Eden
If a diverse cast of characters is representative of our world, it should include people who aren't neurotypical. What are ways you can write a neurodiverse cast without perpetuating stereotypes? What are works that have done it well and what can we learn from them?
- Fri 2:30 PM (1hr)
[5] Watertable
Presentation
- The Benefits and Perils of Using Simple Models to Understand the Real World
Andy Love
Scientists (and other people) often try to understand and predict the world with simple models. It works surprisingly well—but there are risks to this approach. Andrew Love will discuss the benefits and risks of this approach, with many examples of over-simple models "in the wild." He'll also provide some advice on how to tell if you're being fooled (by yourself or others) by a model that's too simple. Remember, as statistician George Box said "All models are wrong, but some are useful."
- Fri 2:30 PM (1hr)
Virtual Panel
Room 1
Panel
- Scientific Sources for Science Fiction
Art Sierra, Adeena Mignogna, Thomas R. Holtz, Jr., PhD, Miguel O. Mitchell, PhD (m)
Developing the core science for your science fiction can be a tricky task. What are the written sources you should be turning to when learning about a field? What are the best online communities to help with your writing research? And how do you get scientists to answer your nitty gritty questions?

FRIDAY AFTERNOON

Fri 3:00 PM
(1hr 50min)
[5] Federal Hill
Scheduled Game

Periodic: A Game of the Elements
Pyris (m)
Federal Hill Table 1 In Periodic: A Game of the Elements, players collect sets of elements and advance their research by moving through the periodic table. Players use energy to activate periodic trends and move in the corresponding directions. The conservation of energy forces players to spend carefully and play efficiently. The game ends when someone completes the research track or when a stack of goal cards is depleted. The player with the most victory points at the end of the game wins!

Fri 3:00 PM (2hr)
[6] Room 6015
Screening

Film: Outbreak (1995)
Army doctors struggle to find a cure for a deadly virus spreading throughout a California town that was brought to America by an African monkey. (IMDB) Rated R. Start and end times are approximate.

Fri 4:00 PM
(3hr 50min)
[5] Federal Hill
Scheduled Game

Game Demo: Space Base
Perrienne Lurie (m)
Federal Hill Table 5 In Space Base, players assume the roles of Commodores of a small fleet of ships. Ships begin docked at their stations and are then deployed to sectors as new ships are commissioned under your command. Use cargo vessels to engage in trade and commerce; mining vessels to build reoccurring base income; and carriers to spread your influence. Establish new colonies for a new Commodore in a sector to gain even more influence. Gain enough influence and you can be promoted to Admiral! Space Base is a quick-to-learn, quick-to-play dice game using the core "I roll, everyone gets stuff" mechanism seen in other games. It's also a strategic engine builder using a player board (your space base) and tableaux of ship cards you can buy and add to your board. The cards you buy and the order you buy them in have interesting implications on your engine beyond just the ability on the card you buy, making for a different type of engine construction than seen in similar games. Players can take their engine in a number of directions: long odds and explosive gains, low luck and steady income, big end-game combos to launch from last to first, or a mix-and-match approach. Ultimately, Space Base is a game you can just start playing and teach everyone how to play in the first round or two and has a satisfying blend of dice-chucking luck and challenging strategic choices.

Being A Good Panelist
Doc Coleman, Mildred Cady (m), Morgan Hazelwood, Wendy Van Camp
Are you a first-time panelist? Done it a few times but unsure of what you're doing? We'll cover the basics of being a panelist, share tips on the best way to present yourself, and make sure you're ready to be a panelist audiences will enjoy.

- Fri 4:00 PM (1hr)
[5] Homeland
Panel
- Revising Your Work
Margaret Riley, Publisher, Scott Edelman, Gail Z. Martin (m), Wen Spencer
You love that twist in your story you've been planning for ages, but you just realized a key character died 100 pages earlier. Or you just finished your reread and decided your epic space war would work best as a satire. What should stay? What should go? How can you look at your work with a critical eye and turn your story into the tale you always dreamed of telling? [Can we tighten this up? - Editor]
- Fri 4:00 PM (2hr)
[5] Private Dining Room
Workshop
- Workshop: Designing a Sentient Species
James Mendez Hodes
To design a new sapient species for speculative fiction involves disciplines from biology to social science, architecture to fashion. More importantly, that species' audience inhabits the real world, and cannot help but apply their own perspective, touchstones, and biases. Somehow we have to balance these variables with the creative constraints of whatever we're making. In this workshop, led by game designer and cultural consultant James Mendez Hodes, we'll collaborate to develop a new species' physicality and culture, as well as rework some SFF staples for the modern era.
- Fri 4:00 PM (1hr)
[5] Watertable
Presentation
- The Growth of Young Stars and Protoplanets!
William Balmer
William Balmer, PhD student at Johns Hopkins University, is using observations from some of the largest telescopes in the world to detect and characterize young exoplanets (planets orbiting stars outside our solar system) and failed stars (referred to as "brown dwarfs"). These observations open pathways to understanding how planets form and evolve throughout the galaxy, and show just how unusual our own planetary system is.
- Fri 4:00 PM (1hr)
[6] Gibson
Panel
- Affirming Representation of Marginalized People
Stephanie "Flash" Burke, Christine Sandquist, Aparna Verma, Craig Laurance Gidney (m)
Whether it's yet another coming out story or about Black America fighting racism, the "issue story" absolutely has its place. Yet, many people want stories that allow them to escape these issues. What are some good examples of characters from marginalized backgrounds and the stories that place them in affirming roles? How do their stories positively resonate with audiences of similar or different backgrounds?
- Fri 4:00 PM (1hr)
[6] James
Panel
- Dark Baptism: Coming into Her Power
Michelle D. Sonnier, Gwendolyn Clare, Michael M. Jones, Ryan O'Nan, Jean Marie Ward (m)
How does the supernatural teenage girl trope explore important themes like coming of age, social alienation, and finding a path?

FRIDAY AFTERNOON

- Fri 4:00 PM (1hr)
[6] Pride of Baltimore II
Screening
- Anime: SPY x FAMILY, Episodes 1–2
A spy, an assassin, and an esper come together to form a family; each for their own reasons and following their own agendas. Although these liars and misfits are only playing parts, they soon find that family is about far more than blood relations. Rated PG-13.
- Fri 4:00 PM (1hr)
[6] St. George
Reading
- Reading: D.H. Aire and A.L. Kaplan
D.H. Aire, A. L. Kaplan
D.H. Aire and A.L. Kaplan will read from their new and upcoming works.
- Fri 4:00 PM (1hr)
Virtual Consuite
Readings
Participatory Event
- Solarpunk Roundtable Discussion
Francesco Verso
Solarpunk is an international literary movement that explores inclusive, eco-friendly futures, alternative technologies, and community engagement. Writer, editor, and translator Francesco Verso will lead an open discussion about the current state of solarpunk, what it is (and isn't), how it can avoid the commercialization that has hampered other speculative fiction moments such as cyberpunk, and how solarpunk can inspire real-world action and change.
- Fri 4:00 PM (1hr)
Virtual Panel
Room 1
Panel
- Rating Books in the Algorithm Age
Mary Soon Lee, Eric Hardenbrook, Oghenechovwe Donald Ekpeki, JL Gribble (m)
Do numeric rating systems such as “X out of 10” lead to a loss of nuance? Can the ubiquitous five-star rating system (as used by Amazon and Goodreads) lead to grade inflation? Is a well-written entertaining work deserving of top ratings, or does it also need to be groundbreaking? When a rating is going to be amalgamated without context, what are a reviewer’s ethical responsibilities?

- Fri 5:00 PM
(3hr 50min)
[5] Federal Hill
Scheduled Game
- Terraforming Mars (with Prelude expansion)
Jolinda Hall (m)
Federal Hill Table 4 In the 2400s, mankind begins to terraform the planet Mars. Giant corporations, sponsored by the World Government on Earth, initiate huge projects to raise the temperature, the oxygen level, and the ocean coverage until the environment is habitable. In Terraforming Mars, you play one of those corporations and work together in the terraforming process, but compete for getting victory points that are awarded not only for your contribution to the terraforming, but also for advancing human infrastructure throughout the solar system, and doing other commendable things. The players acquire unique project cards (from over two hundred different ones) by buying them to their hand. The projects (cards) can represent anything from introducing plant life or animals, hurling asteroids at the surface, building cities, to mining the moons of Jupiter and establishing greenhouse gas industries to heat up the atmosphere. The cards can give you immediate bonuses, as well as increasing your production of different resources.
- Fri 5:00 PM (1hr)
[6] Pride of Baltimore II
Screening
- Anime: Ranking of Kings, Episodes 1–2
A deaf and mute prince, Bojji, is looked down upon by his retainers and the public but his life takes a turn when he meets Kage, the shadow. Their unlikely friendship lays the budding foundations of the prince's journey, to fulfill his desire of becoming the best king he can be. Rated PG-13.
- Fri 5:00 PM (2hr)
[6] Room 6015
Screening
- Film: Virus (1980)
After a virus devastates the global human population, survivors in Antarctica desperately try to find a cure and save the human race. (IMDB) Rated PG. Start and end times are approximate.
- Fri 5:30 PM (1hr)
[5] Guilford
Panel
- Mapping the Landscape
Rosemary Claire Smith, Tom Doyle (m), Daniel M Ford, Eric Hardenbrook, Scott H. Andrews
Every science fiction and fantasy reader has their favorite book with a map in the forward or appendix. Besides helping audiences keep track of where things are taking place, what roles do maps play in fiction and gaming? How does a creator go about creating a clear memorable map, from both narrative and visual perspectives?
- Fri 5:30 PM (1hr)
[5] Homeland

FRIDAY AFTERNOON

- Fri 5:30 PM (1hr) Programming a Primitive Eye Using DNA
[5] Watertable
Presentation
Misha Rubanov (he/him)
The field of DNA nanotechnology works on building chemical programs, analogous to computer algorithms, out of DNA. This is possible because DNA is comprised of four specific nucleotides (A, C, G, and T) and that two strands only bind if they have complementary A-T and C-G sequences. DNA nanotechnologists have used this principle to make chemical computers that can do arithmetic, play tic-tac-toe, and even recognize patterns. This presentation will explain how DNA computers work and how they are able to accomplish visual pattern recognition.

Costume Creation Challenge

The Costume Creation Challenge is a 24-hour challenge to make a costume and present it at the Balticon Masquerade. Contestants will have the option of either registering the costume to do a skit in the general Masquerade or walk on with other C3 contestants in a fashion show format. Contestants will arrive at the workroom at 6pm and be given access to bins of fabric, cardboard, and other random bits collected for the challenge. At 10:00 PM, all tools and remaining supplies will be packed up. Tools may be borrowed for 24 hours for a nominal deposit and contestants may continue to work on their costumes until checking in at the Green Room on Saturday evening. Federal Hill Table 2 In the co-operative trick-taking game The Crew: The Quest for Planet Nine, the players set out as astronauts on an uncertain space adventure. What are the rumors regarding the unknown planet about? The eventful journey through space extends over 50 exciting missions. But this game can only be defeated by meeting common individual tasks of each player. In order to meet the varied challenges communication is essential in the team. But this is more difficult than expected in space.

Fate of the Elder Gods

Pyris (m)

Federal Hill Table 1 In Fate of the Elder Gods, players take on the ever-maddening role of cults trying to summon ancient evil and herald the fall of mankind! Each cult is in competition to be first to summon their god, but they all must also repel intrepid investigators working to seal off the gate to beyond with Elder signs. Gather arcane artifacts, cast powerful spells, embrace the Dark Gift of your Elder God, and be first to hasten doom...before it's too late! During the game, players use a variable hand of spell cards to do one of two things to aid their cult in their mission: Use the spell's Astral Symbol to navigate the areas around Arkham on the unique Fate Clock board, or use the symbols in a location's Astral Column to ready a spell. Readied spells can be cast at any time, but while in a cult's Spell Reserve their primary Astral Symbol can aid in readying future spells, creating an engine for pumping out more potential power. As cults travel to the six locations on the Fate Clock, they activate specific powerful abilities, such as gaining useful artifacts at The Museum or enabling their Elder God's Dark Gift at The Ceremony. As cults send more and more cultists to a location, they may gain control there, adding even more powerful abilities. However, cults must be careful how they navigate Arkham as a location with lots of activity will attract pesky investigators. Tempt fate too many times and the investigators may raid your cult's lodge, placing Elder Signs, and generally getting in the way of summoning your Elder God. Gain too many Elder Signs and it's game over!

Federal Hill Table 5 Unable to talk, an amnesiac ghost communicates with the mediums through visions, which are represented in the game by illustrated cards. The mediums must decipher the images to help the ghost remember how he was murdered: Who did the crime? Where did it take place? Which weapon caused the death? The more the mediums cooperate and guess well, the easier it is to catch the right culprit. In Mysterium, one player takes the role of ghost while everyone else represents a medium. To solve the crime, the ghost must first recall (with the aid of the mediums) all of the suspects present on the night of the murder. A number of suspect, location and murder weapon cards are placed on the table, and the ghost randomly assigns one of each of these in secret to a medium.

Dune: Imperium / Rise of Ix

Erik Delfosse (m)

Federal Hill Table 2 Dune: Imperium is a game that finds inspiration in elements and characters from the Dune legacy, both the new film from Legendary Pictures and the seminal literary series from Frank Herbert, Brian Herbert, and Kevin J. Anderson. As a leader of one of the Great Houses of the Landsraad, raise your banner and marshal your forces and spies. War is coming, and at the center of the conflict is Arrakis – Dune, the desert planet. You start with a unique leader card, as well as deck identical to those of your opponents. As you acquire cards and build your deck, your choices will define your strengths and weaknesses. Cards allow you to send your Agents to certain spaces on the game board, so how your deck evolves affects your strategy. You might become more powerful militarily, able to deploy more troops than your opponents. Or you might acquire cards that give you an edge with the four political factions represented in the game: the Emperor, the Spacing Guild, the Bene Gesserit, and the Fremen. Unlike many deck-building games, you don't play your entire hand in one turn. Instead, you draw a hand of cards at the start of every round and alternate with other players, taking one Agent turn at a time (playing one card to send one of your Agents to the game board). When it's your turn and you have no more Agents to place, you'll take a Reveal turn, revealing the rest of your cards, which will provide Persuasion and Swords. Persuasion is used to acquire more cards, and Swords help your troops fight for the current round's rewards as shown on the revealed Conflict card. Defeat your rivals in combat, shrewdly navigate the political factions, and acquire precious cards. The Spice Must Flow to lead your House to victory! Conflict spreads across the Imperium in Dune: Imperium – Rise of Ix, the first expansion to the award-winning board game.

The sweeping, majestic desert of Wadi Rum in southern Jordan is now a frequent stand-in for alien worlds in some of Hollywood's biggest sci-fi and space adventure films, from Dune to The Rise of Skywalker. Aside from its beautifully strange, otherworldly landscapes, however, this corner of the Arabian Desert is home to a wide array of ancient rock art and inscriptions that express something of the daily lives, thoughts, and experiences of the desert peoples who lived in and moved through this remote landscape across the millennia. This presentation will provide an overview of these extraordinary messages from the past and the high-tech digital tools that archaeologists use to gain new information about their date, context, and meaning.

- Doctor Who and the Series Shake-up...of Death!
Jennifer R. Povey, Doc Coleman, Brick Barrientos, D.H. Aire, Hildy Silverman (m)
It's been quite a year for Doctor Who fans. There were six linked new episodes and a New Year's special, and both the current Doctor Jody Whittaker and current showrunner Chris Chibnall announced they'd be leaving. Then came the news that Russell T Davies would be taking over again, and just a few weeks ago we found out that Ncuti Gatwa (Netflix's Sex Education) would be cast as the Doctor! We'll talk about the recent episodes, the Whittaker/Chibnall era as a whole, and where the show might be going next.

Hooray! The End Times Are Here!

Gabriel Saldías Rossel, Jay Smith, John Robison, Oghenechovwe Donald Ekpeki, T. C. Weber (m)
The collapse of civilization is not usually seen as a good thing, but in history and fiction, some have eagerly awaited such an event. Some are relishing the day when the Divine finally winnows the wheat from the chaff. Others for when anarchy has set in and they can finally give their neighbor what he deserves after his dogs ruined their azaleas. Whether utopia, dystopia or anything in between, this panel will discuss fiction that describes the end times as an absolutely superb idea.

Predicting the Music of the Future

Rand Bellavia, Bryant Keith O'Hara (m), Marnen Laibow-Koser, Madison "Metricula" Roberts, Diana Raynes

If there's one thing that SFFH has been bad at, it's projecting popular music into the future.

Considering how incomprehensible a 2020 album like Poppy's I Disagree would be to mid-20th century listeners, why has genre fiction failed to even try to predict major future musical shifts? Star Trek and Babylon 5 are notorious for having characters that love classical or 20th century music. Why has no major genre show anticipated major shifts in the form or structure of popular music?

Camp in Costuming

Andrew Trembley, Kevin Roche, Yakira Heistand (m)

Camp (the postmodern appreciation of style via an ironic lens) has been a fundamental building block of the SFF aesthetic for decades. Many fan-favorite low-budget costumes were seen as futuristic, but today are seen through the lens of camp. In costuming (and otherwise!), how do you communicate to an audience whether or not the irony in your work is intentional? How does performative artifice fit into the hall- and stage-costuming traditions of SFF conventions?

Pitchstorm
Pyris (m)
 Federal Hill Table 1 Pitchstorm is a party card game that puts players in the position of unprepared writers pitching movie ideas to the world's worst executives. During each round, one player acts as the executive, and everyone else attempts to pitch them movie ideas based on a character card and a plot card. At some point during each pitch, though, the executive may add a note card to the pitch and force the writer to add some really terrible new elements to their movie. At the end of the pitches, the executive chooses which movie they liked the best, with that person scoring a point, then the game continues from there.

Stardew Valley: The Board Game
Jolinda Hall (m)
 Federal Hill Table 4 A cooperative board game of farming and friendship based on the Stardew Valley video game by Eric Barone. Work together with your fellow farmers to save the Valley from the nefarious JojaMart Corporation! To do this, you'll need to farm, fish, friend and find all kinds of different resources to fulfill your Grandpa's Goals and restore the Community Center. Collect all kinds of items, raise animals, and explore the Mine. Gain powerful upgrades and skills and as the seasons pass see if you're able to protect the magic of Stardew Valley! The goal of the game is to complete Grandpa's Goals and restore the Community Center, which requires you to gather different types of resources represented by tiles. You have a fixed amount of turns to accomplish this. This is driven by the Season Deck of 20 cards, one of which is drawn each turn to trigger certain events. Cooperatively the players decide each turn where they will focus their individual actions and place their pawn in that part of the Valley. Using their actions, they visit specific locations, trying to gather resources to complete their collective goals. Actions include things like: watering crops, trying to catch fish, rolling dice to explore the mines, and many more. When the Season Deck is exhausted, the game ends.

Federal Hill Table 2 Terraforming Mars: Ares Expedition is an engine-building game in which players control interplanetary corporations with the goal of making Mars habitable (and profitable). You will do this by investing mega credits (MC) into project cards that will directly or indirectly contribute to the terraforming process. In order to win, you will want to accumulate a high terraform rating (TR) and as many victory points (VP) as you can. Players raise their TR by increasing global parameters: oceans, oxygen, and temperature. TR also determines each corporation's basic income, and, at the end of the game TR counts as VP. Additional VP and production capabilities are awarded for building project cards and other actions taken during the game.

Christine France, PhD (she/her)
Archaeological studies often include human remains, consisting of only bones and teeth, whose identity has been lost to time. Fortunately bones and teeth are direct products of nutrients consumed by humans. With the right biochemical proxies, bones and teeth can yield information about diet, provenance, and demographics of these unknown individuals. The Smithsonian Museum Conservation Institute Stable Isotope Mass Spectrometry Laboratory applies stable isotopes to North American archaeological remains in an effort to better understand the life history and lifestyles of 17th, 18th and 19th century individuals. Alice, Mad Hatter, Red Queen, Jabberwock, and Cheshire Cat must gather all that they can while playing nice at the Hatter's Tea Party before going to battle! In Wonderland's War, 2-5 players take the role as a faction leader who has been invited to the Hatter's tea party. Drink tea and eat cake as you move around the table drafting cards to gather your forces, build your towers, upgrade your leader, and recruit Wonderlandians to your cause — but one must be careful as shards of the Looking Glass are spread throughout Wonderland. Once all the plates are empty, the Tea Party is over and war begins. Use the forces you gathered to battle your enemies in familiar locations, but make sure not to draw your shard chips or your towers will fall and you will be out of the fight. Can you muster enough strength to win the battle, or will you just try to gain region bonuses for set scoring throughout the game instead?

Dune: Imperium / Rise of Ix

Erik Delfosse (m)

Federal Hill Table 2 Dune: Imperium is a game that finds inspiration in elements and characters from the Dune legacy, both the new film from Legendary Pictures and the seminal literary series from Frank Herbert, Brian Herbert, and Kevin J. Anderson. As a leader of one of the Great Houses of the Landsraad, raise your banner and marshal your forces and spies. War is coming, and at the center of the conflict is Arrakis – Dune, the desert planet. You start with a unique leader card, as well as deck identical to those of your opponents. As you acquire cards and build your deck, your choices will define your strengths and weaknesses. Cards allow you to send your Agents to certain spaces on the game board, so how your deck evolves affects your strategy. You might become more powerful militarily, able to deploy more troops than your opponents. Or you might acquire cards that give you an edge with the four political factions represented in the game: the Emperor, the Spacing Guild, the Bene Gesserit, and the Fremen. Unlike many deck-building games, you don't play your entire hand in one turn. Instead, you draw a hand of cards at the start of every round and alternate with other players, taking one Agent turn at a time (playing one card to send one of your Agents to the game board). When it's your turn and you have no more Agents to place, you'll take a Reveal turn, revealing the rest of your cards, which will provide Persuasion and Swords. Persuasion is used to acquire more cards, and Swords help your troops fight for the current round's rewards as shown on the revealed Conflict card. Defeat your rivals in combat, shrewdly navigate the political factions, and acquire precious cards. The Spice Must Flow to lead your House to victory! Conflict spreads across the Imperium in Dune: Imperium – Rise of Ix, the first expansion to the award-winning board game.

The Big Book of Madness

SOMEONE RANDOM (m)

Federal Hill Table 3 So far your first year at the Elementary College has been slightly disappointing. They taught you to light a flickering flame at the tip of your finger, but other than that you've spent much more time reading books than learning powerful spells as future great wizards like you should. So when you heard about the Big Book of Madness hidden in the great school library, you couldn't help but to sneak in and peek in this intriguing tome in spite of your professors' warnings. When you slowly lift the cover of the terrible book, dozens of dreadful creatures rush out, threatening to destroy the world itself! This was your mistake, and only you can fix it now! Learn from the library to fight back against the monsters, and try not to sink into insanity... The Big Book of Madness is a challenging co-operative game in which the players are magic students who must act as a team to turn all the pages of the book, then shut it by defeating the terrible monsters they've just freed. Each player has their own element deck that they build during the game and use for several purposes, such as learning or casting a spell, adding a new element to their deck, destroying or healing a curse. Spells allow you to support your playmates, improve your deck, draw cards, etc. — but the monsters from the book fight back. Each comes with terrible curses that are triggered every turn unless you dispel them in time. They will make you discard elements, add madness cards to your deck, or lose spells...

Federal Hill Table 4 Battlestar Galactica: The Board Game is an exciting game of mistrust, intrigue, and the struggle for survival. Based on the epic and widely-acclaimed Sci Fi Channel series, Battlestar Galactica: The Board Game puts players in the role of one of ten of their favorite characters from the show. Each playable character has their own abilities and weaknesses, and must all work together in order for humanity to have any hope of survival. However, one or more players in every game secretly side with the Cylons. Players must attempt to expose the traitor while fuel shortages, food contaminations, and political unrest threatens to tear the fleet apart. After the Cylon attack on the Colonies, the battered remnants of the human race are on the run, constantly searching for the next signpost on the road to Earth. They face the threat of Cylon attack from without, and treachery and crisis from within. Humanity must work together if they are to have any hope of survival...but how can they, when any of them may, in fact, be a Cylon agent? Battlestar Galactica: The Board Game is a semi-cooperative game for 3-6 players ages 10 and up that can be played in 2-3 hours. Players choose from pilots, political leaders, military leaders, or engineers to crew Galactica. They are also dealt a loyalty card at the start of the game to determine if they are a human or Cylon along with an assortment of skill cards based on their character's abilities. Players then can move and take actions either on Galactica, on Colonial 1, or in a Viper. They need to collect skill cards, fend off Cylon ships, and keep Galactica and the fleet jumping. Each turn also brings a Crisis Card, various tasks that players must overcome.

Beyond the Sun

Erik Delfosse (m)

Federal Hill Table 2 Beyond the Sun is a space civilization game in which players collectively decide the technological progress of humankind at the dawn of the Spacefaring Era, while competing against each other to be the leading faction in economic development, science, and galactic influence. On a turn, a player moves their action pawn to an empty action space, then takes that action. They then conduct their production phase, either producing ore, growing their population, or trading one of those resources for another. Finally, they can claim up to one achievement, if possible. As players take actions, they research new technologies that come in four levels. Each technology is one of four types (scientific, economic, military, commercial), and higher-level technologies must match one of the types of tech that lead into it. Thus, players create their own technology tree in each game, using these actions to increase their military strength, to jump to different habitable exoplanetary systems, to colonize those systems, to boost their resource production, to develop android tech that allows growth without population, and more.

Saturday Night

Sat 10:00 PM (3hr 50min) [6] James Scheduled Game	Telestrations After Dark Pyris (m) This is an adult version of the award winning Telestrations. Each player begins by sketching a TELESTRATIONS word dictated by the roll of a die. The old fashioned sand timer may limit the amount of time they get to execute their sketch, but it certainly doesn't limit creativity! Time's up! All players, all at the same time, pass their sketch to the next player, who must guess what's been drawn. Players then simultaneously pass their guess -- which hopefully matches the original word (or does it??) -- to the next player who must try to draw the word they see -- and so on. This game contains adult themes and situations that may make some people uncomfortable. Children Not Allowed.

Restoration as a Theme in Contemporary Egyptian Science Fiction

Emad El-Din Aysha

From the uncovering of alien artifacts and lost civilizations to alternate timelines, history has always been a part of speculative fiction. In much of Egyptian SFF, the relationship with the past often takes on additional themes of restoration, such as returning to one's roots, the search for identity, and the revival of lost golden eras, particularly through the steampunk and alternate history genres. Additionally, works often incorporate myths, legends, and fairy tale storytelling to fuse science fiction and fantasy in original and refreshing ways.

Valeria: Card Kingdoms

Pyris (m)

Federal Hill Table 1 The land of Valeria is under siege by hordes of monsters. You and your fellow Dukes must recruit citizens and buy domains to build up your kingdoms and slay the foul creatures that lurk in the surrounding lands. Valeria: Card Kingdoms is a tableau-building game for 1-5 players and will feel familiar to deck-building fans. The cards you buy can work for you on your turn and on all the other player turns, as well. On your turn, roll two dice and activate citizen cards with the result of each individual die and the sum of both dice. Other players will simultaneously activate their citizen cards based on the roll. Next, take two actions from the following: slay a monster, recruit a citizen, buy a domain, or take 1 of any resource. The player with the most victory points at the end wins the game.

Azul: Summer Pavilion

Jolinda Hall (m)

Federal Hill Table 4 At the turn of the 16th Century, King Manuel I commissioned Portugal's greatest artisans to construct grandiose buildings. After completing the Palaces of Evora and Sintra, the king sought to build a summer pavilion to honor the most famous members of the royal family. This construction was intended for the most talented artisans — whose skills meet the splendor that the royal family deserves. Sadly, King Manuel I died before construction ever began. In Azul: Summer Pavilion, players return to Portugal to accomplish the task that never began. As a master artisan, you must use the finest materials to create the summer pavilion while carefully avoiding wasting supplies. Only the best will rise to the challenge to honor the Portuguese royal family.

Michelle Hymowitz (m)

Federal Hill Table 5 On an uninhabited island in uncharted seas, explorers have found traces of a great civilization. Now you will lead an expedition to explore the island, find lost artifacts, and face fearsome guardians, all in a quest to learn the island's secrets. Lost Ruins of Arnak combines deck-building and worker placement in a game of exploration, resource management, and discovery. In addition to traditional deck-builder effects, cards can also be used to place workers, and new worker actions become available as players explore the island. Some of these actions require resources instead of workers, so building a solid resource base will be essential. You are limited to only one action per turn, so make your choice carefully... what action will benefit you most now? And what can you afford to do later... assuming someone else doesn't take the action first!?

Dune: Imperium / Rise of Ix

Erik Delfosse (m)

Federal Hill Table 2 Dune: Imperium is a game that finds inspiration in elements and characters from the Dune legacy, both the new film from Legendary Pictures and the seminal literary series from Frank Herbert, Brian Herbert, and Kevin J. Anderson. As a leader of one of the Great Houses of the Landsraad, raise your banner and marshal your forces and spies. War is coming, and at the center of the conflict is Arrakis – Dune, the desert planet. You start with a unique leader card, as well as deck identical to those of your opponents. As you acquire cards and build your deck, your choices will define your strengths and weaknesses. Cards allow you to send your Agents to certain spaces on the game board, so how your deck evolves affects your strategy. You might become more powerful militarily, able to deploy more troops than your opponents. Or you might acquire cards that give you an edge with the four political factions represented in the game: the Emperor, the Spacing Guild, the Bene Gesserit, and the Fremen. Unlike many deck-building games, you don't play your entire hand in one turn. Instead, you draw a hand of cards at the start of every round and alternate with other players, taking one Agent turn at a time (playing one card to send one of your Agents to the game board). When it's your turn and you have no more Agents to place, you'll take a Reveal turn, revealing the rest of your cards, which will provide Persuasion and Swords. Persuasion is used to acquire more cards, and Swords help your troops fight for the current round's rewards as shown on the revealed Conflict card. Defeat your rivals in combat, shrewdly navigate the political factions, and acquire precious cards. The Spice Must Flow to lead your House to victory! Conflict spreads across the Imperium in Dune: Imperium – Rise of Ix, the first expansion to the award-winning board game.

Much of what we read in SFF creates imagery, which helps artists to create book covers for novels and to design costumes and props for movies. In this session, artist Paige Friedeman will draw large, colorful images, seen by the audience, based on her interpretation of live readings from books by our Author Guest of Honor Nancy Springer, 2022 Compton Crook Award Winner P. Djeli Clark, and Special Guest Authors Seanan McGuire and Wen Spencer. The moderator will read the selections, and Paige will draw her interpretations. After the session, if you'd like, you can arrange to buy the artwork from the artist.

In many SF stories distant colonies or space stations are difficult for their parent states to properly govern, fostering separatist independence movements. Travel distance, communications lag, self-sustainability, and other factors can affect the viability of these movements. Is it really possible to cut the cord? What Makes Video Games Genre?
Christine Sandquist, Gabriel Saldías Rossel, Buggy Bryant (m), Michael R. Underwood
Video games frequently tap into an audience's love of science fiction and fantasy, but too often don't go beyond superficial genre trappings (alien invasions, magical combat, etc.). What are the games that successfully engage with SFF ideas and themes through story and gameplay mechanics, and how can creators further develop genre storytelling in games?

Scheduled Game

Space Base
SOMEONE RANDOM (m)
Federal Hill Table 3 In Space Base, players assume the roles of Commodores of a small fleet of ships. Ships begin docked at their stations and are then deployed to sectors as new ships are commissioned under your command. Use cargo vessels to engage in trade and commerce; mining vessels to build reoccurring base income; and carriers to spread your influence. Establish new colonies for a new Commodore in a sector to gain even more influence. Gain enough influence and you can be promoted to Admiral! Space Base is a quick-to-learn, quick-to-play dice game using the core "I roll, everyone gets stuff" mechanism seen in other games. It's also a strategic engine builder using a player board (your space base) and tableaux of ship cards you can buy and add to your board. The cards you buy and the order you buy them in have interesting implications on your engine beyond just the ability on the card you buy, making for a different type of engine construction than seen in similar games. Players can take their engine in a number of directions: long odds and explosive gains, low luck and steady income, big end-game combos to launch from last to first, or a mix-and-match approach. Ultimately, Space Base is a game you can just start playing and teach everyone how to play in the first round or two and has a satisfying blend of dice-chucking luck and challenging strategic choices.

The Crew: Mission Deep Sea

Pyrus (m)

Federal Hill Table 1 In the trick-taking card game The Crew: Mission Deep Sea, you and the other players work together to search for the lost continent of Mu. This new adventure takes your crew deep down into the abyss on a search for the fabled sunken land. How far you get depends entirely on how well you work together as a team. Card by card, trick by trick, your search party will discover the challenges that lie ahead and forge a path to Mu. This new version of The Crew has the same innovative co-operative trick-taking mechanism as the highly lauded original game — but with some exciting new surprises! While communication between your crew members is severely limited by your submerged state, it is also critical to your success; finding the hidden land in the murky depths depends not only on winning tricks, but also on carefully negotiating the order in which they are won. If things don't go as planned, you might just be able to salvage the operation, but it will take near flawless execution and perhaps a little luck to finally reach Mu.

You represent a house attempting to rise to power as you piece together an assortment of followers (represented by your hand of cards). Will you break the chains of the Society or embrace the dominance of the Golds? Red Rising is a hand-management, combo-building game for 1-6 players (45-60 minute playing time). You start with a hand of 5 cards, and on your turn you will deploy 1 of those cards to a location on the board, activating that card's deploy benefit. You will then gain the top card from another location (face up) or the deck (face down), gaining that location's benefit and adding the card to your hand as you enhance your end-game point total. If at any point you're really happy with your hand, you can instead use your turn to reveal a card from the top of the deck and place it on a location to gain that location's benefit.

Terraforming Mars: Ares Expedition*Erik Delfosse (m)*

Federal Hill Table 2 Terraforming Mars: Ares Expedition is an engine-building game in which players control interplanetary corporations with the goal of making Mars habitable (and profitable). You will do this by investing mega credits (MC) into project cards that will directly or indirectly contribute to the terraforming process. In order to win, you will want to accumulate a high terraform rating (TR) and as many victory points (VP) as you can. Players raise their TR by increasing global parameters: oceans, oxygen, and temperature. TR also determines each corporation's basic income, and, at the end of the game TR counts as VP. Additional VP and production capabilities are awarded for building project cards and other actions taken during the game.

Federal Hill Table 1 Too Many Bones comes loaded for bear by breaking into a new genre: the dice-builder RPG. This game takes everything you think you know about dice-rolling and turns it on its head. Dripping with strategy, this fantasy-based RPG puts you in the skin of a new race and takes you on an adventure to the northern territories to root out and defeat growing enemy forces and of course the infamous "baddie" responsible. Team up or go it alone in a 1-4 player Coop or Solo play campaign. With over 100+ unique skill dice and 4-7 classes to choose from, every battle is its own mini challenge to figure out. Your adventure will consist of 8-12 battles before you reach your final destination and face off against one of a number of possible kingpins in order to win. Along the way, you will be faced with storyline decisions that will quickly have you weighing risk/reward, odds, and logic - with dice woven into every aspect! Your party will also be faced with other decisions: when to rest, when to explore, or even which fights to pursue! The Encounter cards offer fun plot twists and some comic relief, all while setting the stage for your next battle.

Federal Hill Table 4 Each player builds a stained glass window by building up a grid of dice on their player board. Each board has some restrictions on which color or shade (value) of die can be placed there. Dice of the same shade or color may never be placed next to each other. Dice are drafted in player order, with the start player rotating each round, snaking back around after the last player drafts two dice. Scoring is variable per game based on achieving various patterns and varieties of placement...as well as bonus points for dark shades of a particular hidden goal color. Special tools can be used to help you break the rules by spending skill tokens; once a tool is used, it then requires more skill tokens for the other players to use them. The highest scoring window artisan wins!

You may have heard: we're going back to the Moon. It's not just NASA anymore, now it's also the European Space Agency, India, China, Russia, other countries and private contractors. And we're doing it in a big way, going to places that weren't considered or weren't possible in the Apollo days. We're expecting a robotic landing in 2022, working up to around four robot landings per year led by NASA alone, with humans orbiting the Moon around 2024 and landing, well, that date is not so certain yet. So where are we going, why those places, and what will we do when we get there?

Beyond the Sun
Erik Delfosse (m)
Federal Hill Table 2 Beyond the Sun is a space civilization game in which players collectively decide the technological progress of humankind at the dawn of the Spacefaring Era, while competing against each other to be the leading faction in economic development, science, and galactic influence. On a turn, a player moves their action pawn to an empty action space, then takes that action. They then conduct their production phase, either producing ore, growing their population, or trading one of those resources for another. Finally, they can claim up to one achievement, if possible. As players take actions, they research new technologies that come in four levels. Each technology is one of four types (scientific, economic, military, commercial), and higher-level technologies must match one of the types of tech that lead into it. Thus, players create their own technology tree in each game, using these actions to increase their military strength, to jump to different habitable exoplanetary systems, to colonize those systems, to boost their resource production, to develop android tech that allows growth without population, and more.

- History in Our Science Fiction and Fantasy
Gillian Polack
One of the most interesting ways that history can tell us who we are and where we come from is by looking for the history that creeps into fiction. Science fiction and fantasy are wonderful for this. When we think we're living in wonder and exploring new worlds, we often reinforce the past through old stories or questions not asked. Dr Gillian Polack (sometimes ethnohistorian, sometimes Medievalist, sometimes narrative studies expert and always science fiction and fantasy writer) will explore some of the more interesting highways, byways and strange dead ends. This is not the history of Great Minds, or Significant Rulers, or even Important Wars. It's the history of the cultures we all carry, and how the stories we love help us interpret the world around us.

Federal Hill Table 4 Spyfall is a party game unlike any other, one in which you get to be a spy and try to understand what's going on around you. Spyfall is played over several rounds, and at the start of each round all players receive cards showing the same location — a casino, a traveling circus, a pirate ship, or even a space station — except that one player receives a card that says "Spy" instead of the location. Players then start asking each other questions — "Why are you dressed so strangely?" or "When was the last time we got a payday?" or anything else you can come up with — trying to guess who among them is the spy. The spy doesn't know where he is, so he has to listen carefully. When it's his time to answer, he'd better create a good story! At any time during a round, one player may accuse another of being a spy. If all other players agree with the accusation, the round ends and the accused player has to reveal his identity. If the spy is uncovered, all other players score points. However, the spy can himself end a round by announcing that he understands what the secret location is; if his guess is correct, only the spy scores points. After a few rounds of guessing, suspicion and bluffing, the game ends and whoever has scored the most points is victorious!

Ada Palmer
Families like the Borgia and Medici are (in)famous in popular culture, but the real Renaissance Vatican was even stranger and wilder than fiction usually depicts, a nexus of power and corruption which affected the whole European and Mediterranean worlds, with unexpected residents ranging from exotic beasts to Ottoman princes, where the feuds of Italian families rippled out to shape the lives and laws of places from Hungary to Iceland, the Inquisition was an afterthought batted around as a tool of personal power, and only 20% of people in Rome were Roman. Putting on her historian hat rather than her writer hat, Ada Palmer tells her best stories of Renaissance Rome and its implausible complexities, and talks about the unique circumstances which enabled events like those described in Machiavelli's Prince.

Popularizing Science in Media
Tim Livengood, Adeena Mignogna (m), Jim Beall
Heinlein, Star Trek, Carl Sagan, and others popularized science for past generations. Who best blends science and entertainment in a way that captivates us and makes us want to learn the actual science? Can accurate science in fictional works blunt or counteract popular ignorance and acceptance of pseudoscience?

Neighbors of the Dinosaurs: Mesozoic 'Dragons' of the Land, Sea & Air
Thomas R. Holtz, Jr., PhD
There was more to the Age of Reptiles than dinosaurs. Mighty ichthyosaurs, plesiosaurs, mosasaurs (and others) plied the seas, and pterosaurs were already masters of the skies when birds were beginning their first tentative flights. What exactly were these creatures? Where did they come from? What have we discovered about these Mesozoic 'dragons' in recent years? Paleontologist Dr. Tom Holtz will present on these majestic animals.

- Poetry as a Worldbuilding Tool
Angela Yuriko Smith, J.T. Greathouse, Mari Ness, Somto Ihezue, Lee Murray, Beth Morris Tanner (m)
Including snippets of verse and poetic song was a good enough worldbuilding and characterization tool for J.R.R. Tolkien. Should you also use it in your setting? How do you make sure the poetry you include is competently written and suited to the culture of its in-setting authors? How much is too much?

- What the Latest Science Tells Us About Climate Change
T. C. Weber
What do the world's scientists know about the pace of climate change? What do they know about its potential impacts? What can we do to minimize these impacts, both in terms of reducing climate change and adapting to what's already happening? The United Nations Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) just released the final section of its latest assessment of climate change, based on a thorough review of current scientific literature and data. It is the starkest warning yet of major and irreversible damage unless we immediately begin long-delayed cuts in greenhouse gas emissions and remove excess carbon dioxide from the atmosphere.
