EDITORIAL

First there is the planning. Then there is the running around in circles. And then, after the last party is over and the guests have all left, there is the evaluation. The Committee worked nine months to prepare for the Funcon. The question in our minds, of course, is "Was it worth it?"

But how does one rate the success of a science fiction convention? Attendance is one simple yardstick. The Funcon had 396 members, all told, with about 342 of them actually attending. That is about the size of a regular Westercon. We had more fans joining for one day only, though, and more members for whom this was the first convention. Another objective test is profit and loss. The Funcon made enough to provide a generous pass-on for next year's Westercon, and to make a substantial donation to the LASFS Building Fund.

But there are other, more subjective, signs that the Funcon was successful. Little things. There was always an elevator when you wanted one. The parties in the convention suite lasted until daylight every night, with never a complaint from the management. A clutch of neofans drawn by the convention's unaccustomed publicity have remained to join the LASFS. Our full program was, by and large, well attended. Further: its speakers, panels, and other scheduled events came off almost without change from our advance publicity.

The most important yardstick of a good convention though, is whether the attendees enjoyed themselves and came away with pleasant memories. From what we saw, there were few publishing fans there, but all the con reports we have seen so far have been favorable.

All of this indicates that the 1968 Funcon was a success. But was it enough of a success to be worth all the work that went into it? We can only conclude that many conventions are not, judging by the number of con committees that sink into gafia as soon as the con is over. Only the Baycon committee has survived the ordeal of putting on a Worldcon sufficiently well to undertake the task a second time.

Here then is our own moment of truth. The Funcon Committee has decided that the results did justify the efforts and has decided to remain together as the Westercon XXII bidding committee. We feel that the Funcon was a success in its own right. It was also an invaluable learning experience. With this background we expect to be able to put on the best Westercon ever. And we hope that we will see all of you in Los Angeles in 1969.

THURSDAY

Highlighting the program Thursday evening was the Authors' Reception. L.: Forrest J. Ackerman, editor of Famous Monsters of Filmland, Terry Carr, Special Projects editor of Ace Books (a well known fan-turned-pro), and Len Mofatt, long time fan and bibliographer.

The reception was interrupted briefly to allow the Los Angeles Science Fantasy Society to hold a pro forma meeting, thus keeping its unbroken string of Thursday night meetings intact. Shown is LASFS Director Bruce Pelz, and Lee Klingstein, Junior Committeeman, during this 1612th meeting.

FRIDAY

Many excellent costumes appeared at the costume competition which climaxed Friday's events. Standing before Fred Hollander, director of the competition, are prize winners Janet and Clint Bigglestone ("Prezmyra and Corinus"), Larry Dopp ("Thuron, High Priest of the Black Shadow"), and Tim Kirk ("An Orc of Sauron").

Among the audience at the costume competition was Walter Koenig ("Chekov" of Star Trek), shown here with Star Trek fan Paula Crist. Mr. Koenig and his wife took an active part in the convention, attending fan parties as well as the official program items.

SATURDAY

Saturday's main feature was the Funcon Banquet, at which Harlan Ellison, Ray Bradbury, and Guest of Honor Harry Harrison were speakers. Shown is Walter J. Daugherty, noted Los Angeles fan and Funcon auctioneer, discussing with Harrison some aspects of the latter's speech "Science Fiction as Philosophy and Religion".

Karen Anderson, who consented to act as Toastmistress on extremely short notice (and did a very fine job), looks through an assortment of cartoons which noted fan artist Ejo Trimble drew of fans and pros at the Banquet. Looking over Karen's shoulder is her husband, Poul Anderson, Hugo winning author.

SUNDAY

A special Star Trek Luncheon on Sunday provided an opportunity for Star Trek fans to meet members of the cast and production staff of the series. James Doohan ("Scotty" of Star Trek) is shown surrounded by some of the attending fans. A special showing of Star Trek blooper films, limited to luncheon attendees, was enthusiastically received.

Those not attending the program could generally be found at the bar, as is usual in fan conventions. Shown at one such moment are Jerry Pournelle (center), and Poul Anderson.
