Cover--Jack Harness: Nice Coventry drawing. Table of Contents: nice decorations by Bjo.

From Sunday to Saturday--Don Fitch: Wasn't it Walpole who said "Life is a comedy to those who think; a tragedy to those who feel"?

LASFuss 7--Dian and Bruce Pelz: Enjoyed your Stevensonian insult. Have you seen the "new" book by RLS? In The Silverado Squatters he wrote a chapter on Napa Valley wines which was cut out when the book was published (publishers thought it was too much special-interest). A small Californian press recently published it as a small book--a beautifully made book. Even though I don't like wine (I have a poor sense of smell), I enjoyed the book.

The Gallant Gallstone 61--Jack Harness: I was startled by your remarks that consciousness of being inside the body is a "special phenomenon" and that a sense of being outside the body is more efficient. I wonder if most people have a localized sense of self--I do, in the middle of my head a little above the eyes, when I stop to think about it, although at the same time I think of any part of my body as part of myself. In my memories of any experience, however, the visualization switches back and forth between a picture of what my eyes saw and a picture of the whole situation (usually from a few feet behind and above me, but sometimes from the front or side). The switching is a good deal like the effects created by cutting from one camera to another in movies, but I suspect that the resemblance comes, not from my having grown up in a movie-making world, but from the camera techniques' having developed in imitation of common human thought patterns.
