THE MOBIUS STRIP: A POSSIBLE SOLUTION TO THE POLAR OPENINGS

BY:
VICTOR PENCE

Those of you who have either made or seen a Mobius Strip will have an inkling of exactly what this has to do with the much talked about holes at the poles. For those who do not know what a Mobius Strip is I will explain exactly what it is and how it can very well be applied to the Polar Openings. If you take a piece of paper about six inches long about one inch wide and make a circle you will have the makings of a Mobius Strip. The only difference between the circle and the strip is that before you join two ends together with glue or tape you give the circle a HALF TWIST. If you run your finger around the strip you will find that it has ONE SIDE and one edge! Now, if you understand what a Mobius Strip is you may be able to understand my theory.

In the June 1960, edition of FLYING SAUCERS an article appeared entitled "How Atlas' Camera Lies to Us!" On page 8, paragraph 3 this sentence appears: "...then parallel lines meet in less than infinity, and Einstein's 'Curved Universe' is not only curved, but tangled up like a huge ball of spaghetti!" When I read these lines I stopped short. Here was another person who had either discovered the same thing I was working on or someone who was just stating an unproved idea and who didn't realize what he had said.

Having read the works of Ray Palmer for a few years I didn't know just how to take this article. I still don't know if Palmer was "fishing for proof", or if he was just talking. I spent many hours thinking about the theory I had concerning this mystery that surrounds the Poles and the more I thought about it the more I became convinced that I was finding the answer or a partial one.

Basically the theory is simply that the Polar Openings are a part of a huge Mobius Strip or are the whole strip in a fourth dimension. Since we cannot see space we can't see if it is curved, straight, or any other way that you may be able to think of. I have only my own personal work to go on and from what I have come up with I am certain that I am getting close to the answer though to what answer and to what question I am not altogether certain.

Palmer says that there is something very different at the Poles than at any other place on the Earth, and this appears to be the case for all the stories I have heard regarding this particular region. Many people wonder how a race of unknown people can live in the earth and if they do why we haven't as yet seen them. If you take the Mobius Strip and pretend you are looking at it in a fourth dimensional state we can't see the strip in its true light and we miss many of the advantages of living on a Mobius Strip.

When you have made a Mobius Strip you will notice that you have a one sided object! No matter how you try, you will be able to find only ONE SIDE and only ONE EDGE! If you cut this strip length wise you will have ONE Mobius Strip with TWO TWISTS! Cutting the strip into again (as before) you will have TWO SEPARATE MOBIUS STRIPS, each with TWO TWISTS! If you cut one of the two as before, you will have THREE strips, if you cut the other strip you will have FOUR and so on for as long as you wish to cut-or until you reach a point where you can no longer cut through the gangled mess without cutting the others into. You do this long enough and you will have the "ball of spaghetti" that Palmer was talking about.

Because the strip is one sided it curves back on itself and in a small way this may be the way it is at the Poles. If Space is warped at the Poles it may cause the Mobius Strip to bend back on itself and we have a small "universe". If you make a strip and cut it the way I have told you you will see what I mean by the last sentence. It may be that there is a large strip that makes up the Universe and that there are smaller strips that make up the Planetary systems, each complete in its self. Palmer says that when a rocket gets into "real" space that it will no longer exist but will return to its primordial state and I agree with this idea and I have an idea of my own that by space being curved as explained above each planet has it's own strip that makes it a system all by itself that is complete and will exist only as long as the strip remains intact.

There have been a few writers that have talked about a road to the planets by using the Poles and by taking this road you would get to Mars. This may not be as crazy as it sounds because if you examine the Mobius Strip you will see that each strip is a complete strip in itself except that it is intertwined with the other strips and the only way you can separate them is by cutting through one of them from edge to edge. It may be possible to get off our strip and move up to a "higher" strip that is continued to the next planet. Some of you may say "but you said awhile back that each strip was a complete and separate strip and if this is true and it is also true that anything in 'real' space would return to its primordial state then how could it be possible for any of us to take the road to another planet?" To this I would point out that since each strip is a complete strip and is separate it is possible to cross to one or the other at the point where they cross one another.

I received a letter from a person in England in which was a part of a story in which the Devil was talking to someone about the Poles being the last, and only, place on our Earth that man hadn't been in and that when man did enter the "unknown land beyond the Poles the day of Judgement would dawn." The Devil also said that the area around the Poles was neither heaven nor hell but was a corner of our Earth by itself.

If you study the Mobius Strip carefully you will see that it is possible for there to be room for an extra land area and it would be possible for us not to enter it. If you have made a Mobius Strip and have it before you study it carefully and see if you can find the answer to the mystery as I believe I have been able to do.

Because of the strips being interlocked it may very well be that this is the answer to our space travel. If space is curved such as the Mobius Strip shows it to be then maybe all of the planets are made in this way and if so then every planet is interlocked with one another.

If this is true then all we have to do is to find the way to get on this curve and then proceed to take this curve on to another planet!

If space is curved then the distance from the planets and the stars are not as great as the astronomers say that they are and if there is really a road that leads to the planets then maybe we could even go so far as to drive our cars directly to another planet. This is not as crazy as it may seem because if space is this way then there is a good possibility that it also has gravity, air, etc.

If the three planets, that Palmer says are 600, 800, and 100 miles above us, are really there then it is indeed possible for them to be there simply by being on the other side of the Mobius Strip.

Both Mr. Beckley and I would appreciate your comments on this article and your offer to do extensive research on this particular idea along with the author.

—THE NORTHERN LIGHTS SPIRITS IN THE SKY!—

Many fantastic legends about the Northern Lights, or as they are rather scientifically termed the Aurora Borealis, have been passed down from generation to generation. One rather unusual enigma about this phenomena is that scientists have never been able to discover or trace these mysterious lights down.

Many places in Alaska the Aurora can be observed for more than 250 days in the year. These mysterious lights seem to twist and fly across the sky and still continue to baffle many of the tribes still existing in the area.

Legends about this phenomena come from many tribes in the north. One of the most common beliefs circulating about these lights and their mysterious movements is that they are "spirits in the sky". Many tribes members claim on a clear cold night that they are able to hear screams, moans, cries, and a wide variety of strange sounds coming from the direction of the Northern Lights. Some even go so far as to claim that the lights seem to swish or crackle as if telling the people of a coming omen. Many Eskimos in the Ungave Bay area of Canada claim that they are able to talk with these spirits in the heavens.

This phenomena has been known to come close to the mountains and envelope them with a strange flimsy light. This mysterious light has been known to weave in and out of trees and bushes on the mountain tops.

The Eskimo groups living in Siberia and Greenland believe that the Aurora Borealis is the spirits of the dead which play with a skull of walrus. Similar stories with different twists have sprung up in the tribes of the Nunivak Island Eskimos.

Other legends relating to the lights include the spirits of unfortunate children who died at birth, or the dancing of human spirits which have not gone to rest.

One of the most amazing sagas comes from an Indian group in Washington State known as the Makah Indians. They concur that these beautiful sights are attributed to the firelight of dwarfs in the north. Although at first this may seem to be rather fantastic and have no basis in fact however we can easily recall from past articles how Indians of the north claim to have descended from small people who came out of the earth near the Poles. So perhaps, as very often believed, some legends do indeed have some basic facts in them.

The Point Barrow Indians carry knives to protect themselves from these evil spirits in the sky. It is rather interesting to note that many other tribes also hold fast to the idea that the Northern Lights are really the spirits in the sky. We wonder why this idea is so prevalent in the region.

Whatever the Northern Lights may be they continue to be a wonderment to those who have studied it and for those that live in the area and have an ideal look at them.

One explanation for these lights is that there is a sun inside our planet which shines through the polar openings and causes it's light to play on the atmosphere above the Northern Hemisphere. We indeed have a lot to find out about our own planet.

DID YOU KNOW?

- FROM THE PRIVATE FILES OF CHARLES MARCCUX -

There is a story of a French farmer who had a cavern located on his property. Many times he entered the cavern and disappeared for intervals of more than six months. Each time he reappeared it was found that he was aware of the latest news from Europe. In those days there was no means of communication which could relay news from Europe in less than six months. Later, it was always found that the news related by the Frenchman were verified by reports that later arrived from Europe.

There is an entrance to the cavern world within fifty miles of Phoenix which is shrouded with a "ray" similar to the one at Mt. Shasta, California, which hides the area from the world of ignorant men, men who would destroy what it contains.

Within this valley lie the remnants of an ancient civilization known as the Grecian Elders, which existed long before Christ appeared on this Earth. About forty-eight miles east and thirty miles north of this valley is a mountain which contains some of the wealth and records of the Incas of Mexico.

In 1950, a couple of boys on bikes wondered by the mouth of a cave. The mouth of the cave was sometimes flooded with water from the spring thaws and rains. The boys found an old rotted boat by the cave's entrance, and after getting in, proceeded into the cave. Accidentally they found a narrow recess in the cave wall and after going through it discovered steps leading down to the depths. Having no means to light their way, the boys returned to the outside world for supplies and equipment with which to continue their investigation of the steps.

After gathering equipment and supplies, the boys returned to the cave to find that the spot which they had hoped to explore had disappeared and could not be found.

After relating their experiences to other individuals, the boys and several others attempted to again locate the narrow passage but to no avail.

The cave is located in Kentucky, near the Virginia state line. This cave may very well extend into Maine and up into parts of Canada.

Last issue we told of a cave near McAlester, Oklahoma where a party or parties which penetrated this cave, had a terrifying experience with some humanoid type creatures and was only saved by the use of a pair of six guns. Here is further information on this particular incident.

There were three persons in the party which penetrated the entrance. They had only one small flashlight so they turned back for more supplies. Just as they were nearing the top of the entrance, a few feet from the outside, they were attacked by a strange form of animal resembling a man, yet, not a man. One of the three had a colt .45 with him and begin shooting at the beasts. As he did so, the other two men escaped outside just as a slide covered the entrance. The man with the gun was trapped inside. The other two who had escaped outside began to dig him out and it only took a few minutes since the entrance was not badly covered by dirt. In the meanwhile the first rush by the beast was stopped, and there was time to reload the gun. After the entrance was cleared and the man inside was about to be helped out, the beast grabbed him by the foot and others appeared and began to pounce on him. He shot one point blank and in desperation and fright emptied his gun in a helter-skelter fashion.

The three managed to get away from the area and in the melee the person with the gun had noticed even in his fright, a strange yellowish fluid which he assumed to be the blood of the beast which he had shot at close range.

At the entrance to the cave are three small mounds and at the bottom of one of these mounds is a Cross placed there by a preacher long ago. The owner of the land where the cavern is located does not talk about it and shows no alarm when cattle or other animals mysteriously vanish.

These three young men later entered the Korean War.
