THE COLD EQUATIONS

You may know that a British Worldcon Bid is being considered for the 1990's. The site for the bid has still to be selected, the current shortlisted candidates are Jersey, Glasgow and Birmingham. The selection of target year is however turning out to be rather more interesting, involving late night phone calls and clandestine meetings in the USA and Europe.

In fact one British agent has already been held at gunpoint by Texas police (of course at the time even he wasn't aware that he was going to be an agent and the event may have had more to do with using an identical car to a pair of bank robbers but lets not spoil a good story with too many facts).

Originally the bid was targetted for 1995 as it was felt this was the earliest credible date. 1993 would have continued the Conspiracy - Confiction cycle of non US bids pre-empting the Western US bidding zone and would have caused enormous bad feeling from the West Coast. 1994 already had strong bids, particularly Washington. 1995 was free, at that time. 1996 was a Los Angeles bid and would have been unlikely to lose to an overseas bid again after Confiction defeated their 1990 bid. 1997 was open, at that time, and was selected as the "back up" date if 1995 proved impossible. 1998 is a "Noreascon Year", in that it falls on their declared nine year cycle, and NESFA would be impossible to beat. 1999 is possibly a "prestige year" (as are 2000 and 2001) and is likely to attract strong bids, as well as being later than we would like since it would then be 12 years after the last British Worldcon and 9 after the last European one (this also makes it very difficult to carry over experience from one Worldcon to another and we have few large conventions of our own to build up our organisation as even a British Eastercon is considerably smaller than an American regional).

OK everyone got it so far. Good because now things are starting to happen fairly quickly. One - Washington's hotels backed out and their bid was rumoured to have moved to 95, therefore the British plan adopted 97 as the bidding year. Two - Atlanta declared a bid for 95. Three - Texas has a pianned bid for 97, although it has not yet been publicly announced. Four - the rumours about Washington bidding for 95 proved false. Five - Australia announced a bid for 95.

Our feedback from the US is that we would find it much tougher bidding against the Texans than against Atlanta but this gives us hardly any time to raise money to finance the bid. One other factor complicating the decision is the current lack of a bid for the 1992 Eastercon which might mean Conrunning fandom having to put something together over one year (luckily there are strong groups intending to bid 93 and 94). - Keep Watching the Skies!!!
